HISTORY OF THE ARABIAN GULF

The lands on the western side of the Arabian Gulf, now the area of oil developments have held a place in history for thousands of years, going back almost to the beginning of civilization. They undoubtedly offer a field for archaeological exploration — a field, however, which remains virtually untouched except for brief surface surveys and some excavations at Jawan in Saudi Arabia and in Bahrain. The findings have been enlightening, but most presentday knowledge about the early peoples of this region comes from ancient historians.

There is little doubt that civilized man lived here at least as far back as the development of the art of seafaring, which was known in the Arabian Gulf by the dawn of recorded history about 4000 B.C.

It is very likely that the ancient Sumerians of Mesopotamia carried on an active trade with the peoples of the Arabian Gulf. Ancient cuneiform inscriptions refer to a land called Dilmun in Babylonian and Assyrian and named Niduk-ki in Sumerian. This land may have been the Bahrain Islands and a part of the Eastern Province of Saudi Arabia. Possibly the Sumerians at one time set up colonies in this area.

However that may have been, one of the most interesting features of Bahrain and parts of the Eastern Province is the presence of many large mounds or tumuli and tens of thousands of small ones, which were the tombs or sepulchers of the dead of an ancient people. Some of these may be seen today in the Dhahran area. The mound-building tradition in Arabia and Bahrain probably covered a considerable time span. It is certain that burial mounds were being built in this region down to the second century of the Christian era, but a date for the beginning of this tradition has not yet been established.

Mounds of this type have been found also in other parts of Arabia, particularly at al-Karj and Yabrin, and by H. St. John B. Philby in the ancient home of the Sabeans in south western Arabia. The ancient Phoenicians followed a similar practice. A tomb complex at Jawan, near the road from Dhahran to Ras Tanura, has been excavated by a western archaeologist with the agreement of the Saudi Arabian Government. Objects found in the tomb belong to the late first or early second century A.D.

Greek and Roman geographers shed some light on eastern Arabia at the beginning of the Christian era and for a few centuries before that time. These geographers tell of the city of Gerra or perhaps its seaport, which may have been located near the present port of al'-Uqair, though this identification is not certain. Gerra was reported by the Greek geographer Strabo to have been a Chaldean colony, that is, a colony of Babylon. Strabo says:

"The merchants of Gerra generally carry the Arabian merchandise and aromatics by land; but Aristobulus says, on the contrary, that they frequently travel into Babylonia on rafts and thence sail up the Euphrates with their cargoes, but afterwards carry them by land to all parts of the country".

Gerra was apparently an important centre of trade with Babylonia in products not only from southwestern Arabia but also from Oman and India. The overland caravan journey from Hadhramaut to Gerra was said to take forty days. Speaking of Gerra's wealth, Strabo says, quoting earlier writers:

"By the trade both the Sabeans and Gerraei have become the richest of all tribes, and possess a great quantity of wrought articles in gold and silver, as couches, tripods, basins, drinking vessels, to which we must add the costly magnificence of their houses; for the doors, walls and roofs are variegated with inlaid ivory, gold, silver and precious stones".

Both Strabo and Pliny stated that the houses of Gerra were built of blocks of salt. It is more likely that they were constructed of bricks made out of salty mud from the sabkhahs (salt flats).

Pliny described the location of Gerra as being opposite Tylos (presumably Bahrain), which even then was "famous for the vast number of its pearls". He also referred to the region of Attene, 50 miles inland, which doutless was on or near the site of present-day Hofuf. The date gardens along the coast were probably much more extensive in Pliny's time than they are now, as sand dunes have been encroaching upon them.

In the first few centuries of the Christian era, many inhabitants of eastern Arabia became Christians. Darin, on Tarut Island, was a bishopric of the Nestorian Church. A number of gravestones found in the Qatif area, inscribed in the Sabean of Himyaritic alphabet, are thought to commemorate some long-forgotten Christians. Oriental Christian sources mention bishoprics here from the third Christian century. The region did not accept Muslim domination without a struggle. Following the death of the Prophet there was a rebellion which was put down only with the taking of Darin by Muslim troops who waded from the mainland to Tarut Island.

A few centuries later, at the end of the ninth century, much of the present Eastern Province and Bahrain was taken over by, and became the headquarters of a violent Muslim sect known as the Carmathians. The Carmathians gained control over a large part of Arabia. They even took Mecca in 930 and carried off the sacred Black Stone of the Ka'bah to their capital in eastern Arabia, near what is now Hofuf. The Stone was soon restored to Mecca.

In the sixteenth century the Portuguese were active in the Arabian Gulf. On Bahrain Island they built a large fort, which is still standing. Bahrain also was for limited and temporary periods ruled by the Persians on several occasions. The present ruling family of Al-Khalifah took the Bahrain Islands from the Persians in 1783. Meanwhile the British, after forming the East India Company in 1600, had won control of the Gulf, first from the Portuguese and then from the Dutch.

Until the rise of the House of Sa'ud, eastern Arabia was at times under local leaders such as the chiefs of the tribe of Bani Khalid and at other times under Turkish provincial governors. Occasionally Arabian Gulf pirates used coastal points as bases for their operations. A recently demolished fort at Damman was the lair of a notorious pirate during the early nineteenth century.

THE EARLY ARABS

The better-watered and more arable lands bordering the north Arabian desert (that is, the valleys of the Tigris and Euphrates Rivers, the southern slopes of the Taurus Mountains and the eastern shores of the Mediterranean) have been aptly called the Fertile Crescent. It was largely within these lands that the ancient civilizations of the Middle East flourished.

Throughout Middle Eastern history, the peoples of the vast Arabian Peninsula also have played important roles. The distinctive contribution of the people of the great Arabian deserts, however, has been to supply their neighbours with new blood and with the stimulation of their less sophisticated but fresher energies.

The Arabian Peninsula has also had its own ancient centres of civilization. It has always had its oasis gardens and its towns, which still are centres of culture, trade and leadership. But the desert tracts have been peopled, as they are today, by the Bedouins.

From the time of the earliest civilizations, the desert nomads frequently made raids upon their more prosperous neighbours within the Fertile Crescent. On occasion, when organized by leaders who arose among them, they attacked and conquered some of the great centres of civilization, bringing with them the simplicity and virility of the desert and infusing new blood and vitality into the communities of which they became masters. They, in turn, absorbed the culture of the conquered.

In other instances Semitic peoples seem to have migrated en masse to new lands which had not been developed fully — probably gathering Bedouin allies as they went. The Akkadians, the Amorites, the Assyrians, the Chaldeans, the Hebrews and the Arameans were all Semites who may have come out of the Syrian and the Arabian deserts. Semites also made incursions into the land of the Nile. At one time, in the eighteenth century B.C., they probably took part in setting up a dynasty there, that of the Hyksos, which controlled Egypt for nearly 200 years. Later, fired by the new faith of Islam, the people of the Arabian Peninsula surged forth from their deserts to conquer much of the known world.

Another important role played by the peninsular Arabs in the old civilizations of the Nile and the Fertile Crescent was in trade and commerce. Southern Arabia was then a populous and thriving area, known to the Romans as Arabia Felix or Happy Arabia. It was one of the principal sources of frankincense and myrrh, which were used extensively in unguents and perfumes, as incense for the many temples, and by the Romans in the cremation of royal and noble persons. Frankincense and myrrh are still produced in southern Arabia.

Southern Arabia was also a focal region for trade in spices, silks, ivory and other valuble goods destined for Egypt and other Mediterranean lands. The sources of these commodities — India, the Indies and East Africa — were apparently unknown to the consumer countries at first hand. Accordingly the Arabs had a practical monopoly of this highly profitable trade.

The Arabs are reported also to have supplied the more northern countries with gold, copper and precious stones. Some of the gold came from Arabia itself, where ancient mines existed. Copper may have come from the mountains of Oman. Western Arabia is still a source of semiprecious gems.

Radiating from southwestern Arabia were great caravan routes. One of these ran along the western side of the peninsula through Mecca and Yathrib (now Medina) and thence to Palestine or Damascus or around the head of the Gulf of Aqaba to Egypt. Another one ran to the Arabian Gulf seaport of Gerra, from which the goods from Arabia Felix were shipped to Babylonia and other areas. There were other important overland routes, and long trains of camels, carrying rich cargoes and no doubt heavily guarded, were a familiar part of the Arabian scene. The points at which they halted, and the centres at which the goods were sold or redistributed by merchant middlemen, became thriving communities.

Some of the ancient caravan routes are still in use; others are still indicated by paths deeply worn by the tread of countless camels. Until replaced by airplanes and motor vehicles in recent years, camels carried pilgrims by the thousands to the Holy Cities.

Ancient Arabian Civilization

Arabia in ancient times was not merely an adjunct to the civilized countries farther north. It had its own centres of civilization, although they developed later than those in Mesopotamia or Egypt.

At one time, no doubt during the Ice Ages, the whole of the Arabian Peninsula enjoyed a much more favourable climate than it does now. Evidence is found in the well-developed and well-entrenched water courses which could hardly have been formed under conditions existing today. Good examples for these water courses are al-Batin, which trends north-easterly from Najd past Kuwait, and as-Sahba, which runs easterly from the Tuwaiq Mountains south of the latitude of Riyad. These at some time must have been the valleys of rivers.

Stone artifacts or implements found sporadically throughout the Arabian Peninsula provide traces of cultural levels of Middle Paleolithic aspect in northern Arabia, along the area now traversed by the trans-Arabian pipeline system, and of late Paleolithic and Neolothic aspect in the western Rub' al-Khali. One hand axe from central Arabia and another from the western Rub' al-Khali can be classed as Early Paleolithic. At present, none of these cultural levels, which should be of great antiquity, can be dated accurately in the Peninsula.

The early traditions of the Arabs make a distinction between the Arabs of the north and the Arabs of the south. The distinction may have been partly due to the fact that many of those in the south lived in cities, while most of those in the north were nomads. As trade developed between the southern communities and the north, some mixing of the two types of Arabs took place. Before the time of the Prophet Muhammad, many Arabs of southern origin were already living in north Arabia. There, they figured in the tribal wars which inspired much of the pre-Islamic poetry belonging to the earliest period of Arabic literature. Many Arabs of both types also moved into the Fertile Crescent where they mingled with earlier settlers.

The mountains of the Yemen form a populous and relatively well-watered area which for many centuries has been some what isolated from the rest of the world. A wider region, comprising the southwestern and the central southern coast, was the scene of ancient kingdoms which engaged in international commerce.

The people of ancient south Arabia built dams to impound and conserve the floods of the rainy periods, and their system of irrigation seems to have provided their basic means of support. The control they acquired over what was then the main highway for trade between the East and the West was an important element in their prosperity.

Among the earliest states in southwestern Arabia, which rose to prominence in the first millennium B.C., were the Minean of Ma'in and the Sabean of Saba. The Queen of Sheba, who visited King Solomon in the tenth century B.C., may well have been an Arabian princess. However, she may have come from a Sabean colony in the northern part of the peninsula rather than from the land of Saba in the south.

Other kingdoms in southern Arabia were Ausan in the southwest corner nearest Aden, Qataban northeast of Ausan, and Hadhramaut east of Qataban. They fought many wars and experienced many changes in relative fortunes. This southern civilization in its later periods is often referred to as Hymyaritic rather than Minean or Sabean, after the southwestern tribe of Himyar, which grew increasingly powerful.

With the exception of a few scholars such as al-Hamdani in the tenth century A.D., the Arabs have largely neglected earlier Arabian history because of their preocupation with Islamic civilization. Zealous believers, considering pre-Islamic culture to be of no consequence, destroyed many of its vestiges in their efforts to eradicate all traces of idolatry. Except for references in the writings of other ancient peoples and accounts by a few Arab authors, the Western world had no knowledge of the ancient cities of southwestern Arabia until the nineteenth century, when Western explorers visited the area. They found ruins of fine buildings, sculpture, canals, roads and wellplanned cities which revealed an advanced stage of culture.

Of particular importance was the great dam of Ma'rib, constructed of finely hewn limestone and so well-engineered that it compared favourably with the most ambitious structures in other ancient countries. This dam, which supplied an irrigation system adequate for a sizable population, fell into disuse between the time of Christ and the time of Muhammad.

Many inscriptions carved in stone in the Minean and Sabean alphabets have been found in southwestern Arabia. Knowledge of the ancient history of this area is increasing rapidly with the collection and interpretation of these inscriptions.

The Arabs of the north developed more slowly. The first settled communities in their midst appear to have been outposts or colonies of the Mineans and Sabeans. Later, a local people known as the Nabateans assumed control of the northern portion of the rich trade route from the south and built a remarkably beautiful city at Petra, where large buildings were carved out of red sandstone cliffs. Lying in a remote spot in present-day Jordan, it had become lost to the knowledge of the West until rediscovered by the Swiss traveller John Lewis Bruckhardt in the early nineteenth century.

After the rise of Roman power, covetous eyes were turned upon the wealth and trade which Arabia Felix had so long enjoyed. An invasion based on Egypt was organized under the Roman general Aelius Gallus in 24 B.C. According to the Greek geographer Strabo, no difficulty was anticipated because "the Arabians, being engaged mostly in traffic and commerce, are not a warlike people". Strabo reported further that "the barbarians were entirely inexperienced in war and used their weapons unskillfully, which were bows, swords and slings; but the greater part of them used a double edged axe".

The invasion is said to have been aided and guided by a Nabatean official. After a difficult passage through the desert, Najran was taken with ease. In a battle in the old Minean district of al-Jauf, 10,000 of the Arabs were said — most improbably — to have been killed with the loss of only two Romans. Running short of water, however, the Romans were forced to retire without having reached the incense country of Hadhramaut. By the time Aelius Gallus returned to Egypt, most of his army had perished from disease, starvation and thirst. Thus the first Western invasion of the Arabian Peninsula ended in failure.

The military threat, however, was not the only menace to the trade monopoly enjoyed by the Arabs. The Greeks and Romans acquired the Arabs' skill of navigating to India with the aid of the monsoon winds. Thereafter the economic decline of Arabia was only a question of time. The Arabs, for their part, attributed the decline to the breaking of the Ma'rib dam and the consequent ill effects on the agricultural economy.

A northward migration resulted from the southern decline. The kingdoms of al-Hirah in lower Iraq and Ghassan in what is now Jordan were formed by the southern Arabs. Others, of the tribe of Kindah, formed a kingdom in northern Najd, but it was short-lived.

The Abyssinians or Ethiopians fought with the Sassanid Persians for control of southwestern Arabia. The former were largely Semitic in language as a result of earlier migrations from Arabia. The Abyssinians invaded and conquered areas of southwest Arabia in the fourth century A.D., and again in the sixth century. After the latter invasion, the Abyssinian Abraha made an unsuccessful expedition against Mecca in or about 570. His forces included at least one elephant, an animal singularly unsuited for desert warfare. Muhammad the Prophet was born in Mecca during the same year in which the Holy City was saved from danger.

During the rise of Islam in the seventh century, Sassanid Persia again held the Yemen. The Sassanids, who earlier had controlled a part of northeastern Arabia, looked with disdain upon the tribes of Arabia Deserta. These same tribes, under the banner of Islam, soon conquered the Sassanid Empire.

THE RISE OF ISLAM AND THE ARAB EMPIRE

One of the most amazing episodes in the experience of mankind was the birth of a new faith, Islam. From humble beginnings it first enkindled the town and desert peoples of the Arabian Peninsula and then swept over most of the civilized world. It brought forth one of the most brilliant periods of art and culture that the world has known. It remains today the vital faith of some 800,000,000 people.

At the time of the birth of Muhammad at Mecca, about A.D. 570, the Western morld was in a state of decadence and unsert. The Roman Empire, which had controlled the world in the first few centuries of the Christian era, had succumbed long since to the onslaught of European barbarians. Its successor, the Christian Byzantine Empire centred at Constantinople, had been engaged with the Sassanid Empire of Persia in wars which had exhausted both. It was a disorganized world into which Muhammad was born. His teachings spread not only because they were propagated with zeal by his followers, but also because they offered a refreshing new outlook to many misgoverned and disheartened people.

Arabia had been in a state of anarchy, with constant tribal feuds and fights and occasional religious persecutions, such as that of the Christians by the Jews in the southwestern part of the country. The majority of the Arabs still worshipped pagan gods. Even before the rise of Islam, Mecca was a sacred city, the site of a temple: the Ka'bah. Large pilgrimages were made to this shrine, and at that time, as today, the pilgrimage was one of the sources of revenue for the residents of Mecca.

The Prophet Muhammad was born, according to tradition, in the year of the Elephant, so named because it was the year when Mecca was being threatened by the Abyssinian army accompanied by an elephant. Muhammad belonged to the clan of Hashim in the tribe of Quraish, whose members were custodians of the Ka'bah. Even before his birth there had been a rift between his clan and another Quraishite clan known as the Umayyads. This rift foreshadowed a great schism in the ranks of Islam after his death.

Muhammad was the son of 'Abd Allah ibn'Abd al-Muttalib of Mecca. His mother, Aminah, was a daughter of the tribe of Quraish. Little is known of the first forty years of his life except that he became an orphan at an early age, was reared by his grandfather and by an uncle, and at the age of twenty-five married a rich widow, Khadijah, fifteen years his senior, whose caravans he successfully managed. He spent a portion of his boyhood among the Bedouins and from them learned the simplicity of life and the purity of speech of the desert.

About the age of forty Muhammad began to have revelations. He became convinced that God had chosen him to perfect the religion earlier revealed to Abraham, the prophets of Israel and Jesus. Among his initial converts were his wife, his first cousin'Ali (later also his son-in-law), and another kinsman Abu Bakr (later also one of his fathers-in-laws), a leader among Quraish. Other leaders of Quraish were jealous and suspicious of Muhammad's teachings, which threatened their vested interest in the pilgrim trade.

Muhammad continued to make converts, mostly among poor people and slaves. The hostility against him twice grew to a point where he advised his followers to take refuge in Christian Abyssinia. At length his enemies plotted to murder him; but he was fore warned and, 'Ali, his cousin heroically, lay in Muhammad's bed feigning sleep when the would-be murderers arrived. Meanwhile Muhammad, accompanied by Abu Bakr, fled to a nearby mountain cave, and after two nights continued on to Medina, then known as Yathrib. The way had been prepared in the previous year by a compact between the Prophet and leaders of Medina.

The year of this transfer to Medina, the Hijrah (commonly written Hegria), was later taken as Anno Hegirae or A.H. 1 of the Muslim calendar (A.D. 622). At that time Muhammad was fiftyone.

Muhammad's teachings were widely accepted in his new home except by local Judaized Arabs. The new faith began to spread also to other parts of Arabia. The people of Mecca, however, remained hostile, and a number of battles were fought before they came to terms. In 629 Muhammad returned to Mecca as its master. By the time he died, in 632, large numbers of people in all parts of Arabia had embraced the faith of Islam.

Late in life Muhammad began thinking of extending his work beyond the borders of Arabia, and his followers proceeded to put this idea into effect. After quelling somme rebellious elements in the country, including eastern Arabia, they started forth with an army of from 3,000 to 4,000 men on campaigns that were to lead to extensive conquests. As the movement gathered momentum, the numbers were swelled from newly converted populations outside Arabia.

Abu Bakr, the devoted companion of Muhammad, succeeded to the leadership of Islam and became the first Caliph (Khalifah or successor). Khalid ibn al-Walid was one of his most brilliant generals, and ranks among the foremost military men of history. Under Khalid's leadership the Muslim armies struck east toward Sassanid Persia and north towards the Eastern Roman or Byzantine province of Syria. Wherever the armies encountered resistance they offered three alternatives: embrace the religion of the true God, or surrender and pay tribute, or war. Often they were welcomed and converted large numbers of the conquered.

The Byzantine army was dealt a decisive defeat in 636 near the Yarmuk River, east of the sea of Galilee, and was forced subsequently to retreat north of the Taurus mountains.

The Sassanid Persian Emperor was given good cause to regret his scornful and insulting treatment of the first emissaries of Islam. The Muslims won all of Iraq and Persia between 637 and 650. Their greatest victories over the Persians were decisive battles at Qadisiyah, Ctesiphon (the Sassanid capital) and Nehavend.

After Abu Bakr died in 634, 'Umar, another of the Prophet's fathers-in-laws, became the second Caliph. He continued the conquests, and one country after another fell or surrendered. Jerusalem, the third holiest city in Islam, was taken in 638, and was visited by the pious Caliph himself. The Christians were permitted to retain their faith and their shrines. Egypt was won from the Byzantines in 640 and 641, and the city of Alexandria was retaken in 646 after a Byzantine counterattack. Fustat (later Cairo) in Egypt and Basra and Kufah in Iraq were founded as military encampments and afterwards became great cities.

The conquests continued for over 100 years. By 750 the Muslims had swept over North Africa and Spain and over central Asia toward China, but they had failed to conquer Constantinople or France.

Like the Prophet Muhammad the earlier Caliphs were humble and democratic leaders inspired by a great faith. Thereafter, a complex series of rivalries developped for the Caliphate. They resulted in the principal division of the Muslim world into the Shi'ah (or Shi'ites) and the people of the Sunnah (or Sunnites).

The third Caliph, 'Uthman, was an old man by the time his rule began. He was from the Umayyad clan of the tribe of Quraish of Mecca. This clan had been rivals of the Hashimite clan even before the birth of the Prophet. 'Uthman aroused the displeasure of many by showing special favours to members of his own group. He was murdered in his house at the age of 80.

'Ali, the cousin and son-in-law of Muhammad, becaume the fourth Caliph. Another Umayyad, Mu'awiyah, the able Muslim govervor of Syria, charged 'Ali with implication in the murder of 'Uthman and challenged his leadership. In a battle the forces of 'Ali were nearly victorious, but the followers of Mu'awiyah turned the tide by mounting copies of the Koran on their spears to signify that the issue should be decided by the holy word. 'Ali was impressed and agreed to arbitrate. The arbitration went against him, but since it was regarded as unfairly conducted he did not accept the decision.

'Ali continued as nominal Caliph. However, he was opposed by the followers of Mu'awiyah, and he lost many of his own supporters, who turned against him because he had agreed to arbitration. He put down a rebellion, but then was assassinated. Mu'awiyah thus gained the Caliphate.

Ever since that time Islam has been divided between the Shi'ites, who believe that the Caliphate should have descended to the heirs of Muhammad's daughter Fatimah and her husband 'Ali, and the Sunnites, who believe it was properly an elective office. A few years after the death of'Ali, the Shi'ites attempted to place Hussain, the son of'Ali, in the Caliphate. He and his followers were overcome and massacred at Karbala in Iraq, in the Arabic month of Muharran, A.H. 61 (October, 680). This tragic event is still mourned and commemorated by the Shi'ites during Muharram each year. Karbala and an Najah, where 'Ali was buried, are important Shi'ite shrines.

Although Medina had been the original Islamic capital, even before the death of 'Ali the control of the new empire had passed from Arabia, which was left in the status of a province dignified chiefly by possession of the two Holy Cities. Mu'awiyah set up his Caliphate in Damascus. The Umayyad dynasty which he founded lasted until 750. It was then violently overthrown by descendants of al-'Abbas, an uncle of Muhammad. Thus began the 'Abbasid dynasty, which retained the Caliphate until overwhelmed by the Mongols in 1258.

Such are the Highlights of the Muslim Caliphate down to the fall of the great Arab Empire. Thereafter, the Caliphate was merely an appendage of Mameluke rule in Egypt and later of the Ottoman Empire, until the last Caliph was deposed by the Republic of Turkey in 1922 and the office was abolished in 1924.

THE GOLDEN AGE OF THE ARABS

After seizing the Caliphate in 750, the 'Abbasids moved their capital to Baghdad, the scene of the golden age of the Arabs. This age brought together the art, skill, philosophy, learning, science and culture developed by many great civilizations.

On the material side, Baghdad became a fabulous city of mosques, palaces and mansions. Gold and silver, pearls, ivory, jewels, silk works of art, spices, and all types of luxurious foods and handicrafts poured into Baghdad from many parts of the world.Baghdad was not the only city to prosper. Cairo, Alexandria, Damascus, Aleppo and Basra also became centres of wealth and luxury.

The accumulation of learning encouraged the Arabs to carry on energetic research in various fields of knowledge. They welcomed, sponsored and stimulated learned men, scientists, artists, musicians and poets from many places. They established schools in which the knowledge and wisdom of great scholars and philosophers could be studied. The works of such men — Greek, Roman, Syrian, Persian and Indian — were translated into Arabic, and thus were preserved for future civilizations. The Arabs also made new contributions of their own in medicine and other sciences and in literature, especially poetry. They invented algebra and chemistry, the names of which are derived from Arabic words. They greatly advanced the knowledge of astronomy.

While the evidence seems to be that Arabic numerals were brought to Baghdad from India, it was in the great days of Baghdad that the cipher was invented. This concept revolutionized and simplified numerical calculations by leading to the development of the decimal and place system — that is, the use of only ten numerals in an indefinite number of places (units, tens, hundreds, thousands, etc.)

The Arabs had an important role in advancing the manufacture and use of paper, originally devised in China. They introduced this more practical substitute for earlier writing materials, such as clay tablets, papyrus and parchment, through Spain into Europe in time to facilitate the rapid development of printing with movable type.

The tales The Arabian Nights provide an insight into the life and culture of the brilliant age of the Caliph Harun ar-Rashid. These tales are widely known in the Western world even though the real significance of those days has been largely forgotten: namely, that the Arabs not only brought to fruition the accumulated knowledge of world experience but also kept the torch of knowledge burning during the so-called Dark Ages in Europe.

Harun ar-Rashid died in 809. While the glories of his age continued with diminishing brightness long after his time, the empire of the Arabs weakened and decayed. Many areas became independent under separate dynasties. In Iraq several Caliphs fell under the power of Turkish mercenaries, and the capital was moved temporarily from Baghdad northward to Samarra. A militant revival occurred in the period 1055-1194 with the westward sweep of the Seljuk Turks, new converts to Islam, who wrested power from the Muslim Arabs and all others who stood in their path. It was during the Seljuk dominance that the Crusades occurred.

The Crusades, although highly dramatized in the West, did not have much effect upon the general course of events in the Middle East. They did not even stir up any great religious animosity among Muslims whose usual tolerance for other religions has been a commendable trait. One important result of the Crusades was to bring Europeans into contact with Middle Eastern civilization and culture, which contributed greatly to the Renaissance in Europe.

In 1258 the Arab empire was invaded by the Mongols or Tartars under Hulagu Khan, grandson of Genghis

Khan, who ravaged Asia and terrorized Europe. The Mongols were probably the most ruthless warriors of all time. Their guiding creed was expressed by Genghis Khan in these words:

"The greatest joy is to conquer one's enemies, to pursue them, to seize their property, to see their families in tears, to ride their horses, to possess their daughters and wives".

When Hulagu Khan and his hordes swept down upon Baghdad, the powerless 'Abbasid Caliph surrendered after a weak defence. To show his scorn, Hulagu had him put in a sack and trampled to death. Although suffering less than some other cities, Baghdad was plundered, priceless libraries and works of art were destroyed, and many of the inhabitants were massacred. The Mongols continued their destruction elsewhere in Mesopotamia and Syria. What remained of the great system of irrigation, which had made this region fertile and prosperous for thousands of years, was ruined.

The Mongols were defeated near Nazareth by the Egyptian Mamelukes, and withdrew for a period of rule in Persia. The Mamelukes took over Palestine and Syria, ejected the last of the Crusaders in 1291, and joined these lands with Egypt until they themselves were conquered by the Otoman Turks in 1517. The Middle East suffered another destructive invasion by the Mongols under Timur Lenk (Tamerlanc) between 1393 and 1402.

Meanwhile, the Ottoman Turks had come into Asia Minor in the wake of the Seljuks. Recovering from the blows by Tamerlanc, they ended the Byzantine Empire with the capture of Constantinople in 1453. Ottoman military power was feared throughout Europe for about two centuries thereafter. However, after the failure of the second Ottoman attempt to take Vienna in 1683, the empire declined — and with it the Middle Eastern lands under its inefficient rule.

About the time that Columbus discovered the New World, Portuguese seafarers and merchants were establishing footholds on the coasts of India and the Arabian Gulf. After them came the British and, temporarily, the Dutch. The British not only displaced the Portuguese but challenged the hold of the Turks at strategic points. These developments, however, had little effect upon the slumbering lands of the Middle East.

THE LEAGUE OF ARAB STATES

(Founded in 1944)
Tunis-Tunisia

The League of Arab States is a voluntary association of sovereign Arab States designed to strengthen the close ties linking them and to coordinate their policies and activities and direct them towards the common good of all the Arab countries.

Concept of the League

The concept of Arab cooperation in the field of international political manœuvering takes its roots in the early 30s. The emergence of Italy as a political power and the steps taken by Mussolini to extend Italian overseas possessions came as a rude awakening to a number of Arab States. It was borne home by the lesson of Abyssinia that imperialist penetration was to be regarded as by no means at an end, and though the further expansion of British and French power seemed unlikely at the end of World War II, the prevailing tendency towards Arab independence might be reversed, with other aggressive outsiders seeking to obtain colonial territories in the Middle East. Middle Eastern apprehensions had earlier materialised in the Treaty of Saadabad between Iran, Iraq, Turkey and Afghanistan.

Though the treaty had little positive results, the way had been pointed for further collaboration; and when four years later the Middle East had been drawn into the Second World War, and for the second time in twenty-five years opposing armies from Europe were fighting across Arab soil, the idea of political cooperation returned.

On this occasion Egypt took the lead and invitation were issued to a number of Arab States in order to dicuss the possibility of advancing Arab interests by joint collaboration in measures designed to reduce foreign intervention. As a result, the Arab League was formed in 1945, with the States of Egypt, Iraq, the Lebanon, Saudi Arabia, Syria and Transjordan as members.

Transfer of the Arab League headquarters to Tunis

In accordance with the decision of the March 1979 Baghdad conference held in protest against the peace negotiations between Egypt and Israel, new headquarters for the Arab League were subsequently established in Tunis where an extraordinary meeting of the League's Council of Ministers was held on June 27-28 under the chairmanship of Mr. Mohamed Fitouri. At the conclusion of the session it was announced that Mr. Chedli Klibi, hitherto Information Minister had been appointed Secretary - General of the Arab League in succession to Mr. Riad.

PACT OF THE LEAGUE OF ARAB STATES

(March 22, 1945)

His Excellency the President of the Syrian Republic;

His Majesty the King of Iraq;

His Majesty the King of Saudi Arabia;

His Excellency the President of the Lebanese Republic;

His Majesty the King of Yemen;

Desirous of strengthening the close relations and numerous ties which link the Arab States; and anxious to support and stabilise these ties upon a basis of respect for the independence and sovereignty of these States, and to direct their efforts toward the common good of all the Arab countries, the security of their future, the realization of their future, the realization of their aspirations and hopes; and responding to the wishes of Arab public opinion in all Arab lands have agreed to conclude a pact to that end.

Art. 1 — The League of Arab States is composed of independent Arab States which have signed this Pact.

Any independent Arab State has the right to become a member of the League. If it desires to do so, it shall submit a request which will be deposited with the Permanent Secretariat General and submitted to the Council at the first meeting held after submission of that request.

Art. 2 — The League has as its purpose the strengthening of the relations between the member States; the co-ordination of their policies in order to achieve cooperation between them and to safeguard their independence and sovereignty; and a general concern with the affairs of the Arab countries. It has also as its purpose the close co-operation of the member States, with due regard to the organization and circumstances of each State, on the following matters:

A — Economic and financial affairs, including trade relations, customs, currency, agriculture and industry;

B — Communications, including railways, roads, aviation, navigation, telegraph and post;

C — Cultural affairs;

D — Nationality, passports, visas, execution of judgements and extradition of criminals;

E — Social affairs;

F — Health problems.

Art. 3 — The League shall have a Council composed of the representatives of the member States of the League; each State shall have a single vote, irrespective of the number of its representatives.

It shall be the task of the Council to achieve the objectives of the League and to supervise the execution of agreements which the member States have concluded on the questions enumerated in the foregoing article, or on any other question.

Likewise it shall be the Council's task to decide upon the means by which the League is to co-operate with the international bodies to be created in the future in order to guarantee security and peace and regulate economic and social relations.

Art. 4 — For each of the questions listed in Article 2 there shall be set up a special committee in which the member States of the League shall be represented. These committees shall be charged with the task of laying down the principles and extent of cooperation. Such principles shall be formulated as draft agreements to be presented to the Council for examination preparatory to their submission to the aforementioned States.

Representatives of the other Arab countries may take part in the work of the aforesaid committees. The Council shall determine the conditions under which these representatives may be permitted to participate and the rules governing such participation.

Art. 5 — Any resort to force in order to resolve disputes arising between two or more member States of the League is prohibited. If there should arise among them a difference which does not concern a State's independence, sovereignty, or territorial integrity, and if the parties to the disputes have recourse to the Council for the settlement of this dispute, the decision of the Council shall then be enforceable and obligatory.

In such a case, the States between whom the difference has arisen shall not participate in the deliberations and decisions of the Council.

The Council shall mediate in all differences which threaten to lead to war between two member States, or a member State and a third State, with a view to bringing about their reconciliation.

Decisions of arbitration and mediation shall be taken by majority vote.

Art. 6 — In case of aggression or threat of aggression by one State against a member State, the State which has been attacked or threatened with aggression may demand the immediate convocation of the Council.

The Council shall by unanimous decision determine the measures necessary to repel aggression. If the aggressor is a member State, his vote shall not be counted in determining unanimity.

If as a result of the attack, the government of the State attacked finds itself unable to communicate with the Council, that State's representative on the Council shall have the right to request the convocation of the Council for the purpose indicated in the foregoing paragraph. In the event that this representative is unable to communicate with the Council, any member State of the League shall have the right to request the convocation of the Council.

Art. 7 — Unanimous decisions of the Council shall be binding upon all member States of the League; majority decisions shall be binding only upon those States which have accepted them.

In either case the decision of the Council shall be enforced in each member State according to its respective basic laws.

Art. 8 — Each member State shall respect the systems of government established in the other members States and regard them as exclusive concerns of those States. Each shall pledge to abstain from any action calculated to change established systems of government.

Art. 9 — States of the League which desire to establish closer co-operation and stronger bonds than are provided by this Pact may conclude agreements to that end.

Treaties and agreements already concluded or to be concluded in the future between a member State and another State shall not be binding or restrictive upon other members.

Art. 10 — The permanent seat of the League shall convene in ordinary session twice a year, in March and September. It shall convene in extraordinary session upon the request of two member States of the League whenever the need arises.

Art. 12 — The League shall have a permanent Secretariat - General which shall consist of a Secretary - General, Assistant Secretaries, and an appropriate number of officials.

The Council of the League shall appoint the Secretary General by a majority of two-thirds of the States of the League. The Secretary-General, with the approval of the Council, shall appoint the Assistant Secretaries and the principal officials of the League.

The Council of the League shall establish an administration regulation for the functions of the Secretariat - General and matters in relation to its staff.

The Secretary-General shall have the rank of Ambassador and the assistant Secretaries that of Ministers Plenipotentiary.

Art. 13 — The Secretary - General shall prepare the draft budget of the League and submit it to the Council for approval before the beginning of each fiscal year.

The Council shall fix the share of the expenses to be borne by each State of the League. This share may be reconsidered if necessary.

Art. 15 — The members of the Council of the League as well as the members of teh committees and the officials who are to be designated in the administrative regulation shall enjoy diplomatic privileges and immunity when engaged in the exercice of their functions.

The buildings occupied by the League shall be inviolable.

Art. 15 — The Council shall be convened on the first occasion at the instance of the Head of the Egyptian Government, and subsequently at the instance of the Secretary-General.

Art. 16 — A majority opinion shall suffice for the Council to make effective decisions on the following matters:

(i) personnel — (ii) approval of the League budget — (iii) the internal organisation of the Council, committees and General Secretariat — (iv) the termination of sessions.

Art. 17 — Texts of all the treaties and agreements which member States may conclude shall be deposited with the General Secretariat.

Art. 18 — Should any of the League States contemplate withdrawal from the League, notice of its decision to withdraw shall be given to the Council, one calendar year before withdrawal takes effect. Failure by any State to fulfill the obligations of this Pact may be regarded by the Council that such State has ceased to belong to the League.

Art. 19 — This Pact may be amended by agreement of two-thirds of the member States. Any State which does not accept the amendment may withdraw on the amendment becoming effective.

Art. 20 — The instruments of ratification of the present Pact shall be deposited with the General Secretariat, and the Pact shall have effect with those who have ratified it, 15 clear days after the Secretary - General has received the instruments of ratification from four States.

The present Pact was drawn up in Arabic in Cairo, on the 8th of Rabi al Thani 1364 (22 March 1945) in a single text which shall be preserved in the General Secretariat.

A copy true to the original shall be delivered to each of the member States.

JOINT DEFENCE TREATY

Art. 1 — The Contracting States, in an effort to maintain and stablilize peace and security, hereby confirm their desire to settle their international disputes by peaceful means, whether such disputes concern relations among themselves or with other Powers.

Art. 2 — The Contracting States consider any (act of) armed aggression made against any one or more of them or their armed forces, to be directed against them all. Therefore, in accordance with the right of self-defence, individually and collectively, they undertake to go without delay to the assistance of the State or States against which such an act of aggression is made, and immediately to take, individually and collectively, all steps available, including the use of armed force, to repel the agression and restore security and peace. In conformity with Article 6 of the Arab League Pact and Article 51 of the United Nations Charter, the Arab League Council and the UN Security Council shall be notified of such act of aggression and the means and procedure taken to check it.

Art. 3 — At the invitation of any one of the signatories of this Treaty, the Contracting States shall hold consultations whenever there are reasonable grounds for the belief that the territorial integrity, independence or security of any of the parties is threatened. In the event of the threat of war or the existence of an international emergency, the Contracting States shall immediately proceed to unify their plans and defensive measures, as the situation may require.

Art. 4 — The Contracting States, desiring to implement fully the foregoing obligations and effectively carry them out shall cooperate in consolidating and coordinating their armed forces, and shall participate according to their resources and needs in preparing individual and collective means of defence to repulse aggression.

Art. 5 — A Permanent Military Commission composed of representatives of the General Staffs of the armies of the Contracting States shall be formed to draw up plans of joint defence and their implementation. The duties of the Permanent Military Commission which are set in an annex attached to this Treaty, include the drafting of necessary reports on the methods of cooperation and participation referred to in Article 4. The Permanent Military Commission shall submit to the Joint Defence Council provided hereunder in Article 6, reports dealing with questions within its province.

Art. 6 — A Joint Defence Council under the supervision of the Arab League Council shall be formed to deal with all matters concerning the implmentation of the provisions of Articles 2, 3, 4 and 5 of this Treaty. It shall be assisted in the performance of its task by the Permanent Military Commission referred to in Article 5. The Joint Defence Council shall consist of the Foreign Ministers and the Defence Ministers of the Contracting States or their representatives. Decisions taken by a two-thirds majority shall be binding on all the Contracting States.

MILITARY ANNEX

1. The Permanent Military Commission provided for under Article 5 of the Joint Defence Treaty between the States of the Arab League shall undertake the following:

a) in co-operation with the Joint Defence Council, prepare plans to deal with any anticipated dangers or armed aggression that may be launched against one or more of the Contracting States or their armed forces, such plans to be based on the principles determined by the Joint Defence Council;

b) submit proposals for the organization of the forces of the Contracting States, stipulating the minimum force for each in accordance with military exigencies and the potentialities of each State;

c) submit proposals for increasing the effectiveness of the forces of the Contracting States in so far as their equipment, organization and training are concerned, so that they may keep pace with modern military methods and developments, and for the unification and co-ordination of all such forces;

d) submit proposals for the exploitation of natural, agricultural and industrial resources of all Contracting States in favour of the inter-Arab military effort and Joint Defence

e) organize the exchange of training missions between the Contracting States for the preparation of plans, participation in military exercises and manœuvres and the study of their results, recommendations for the improvement of methods to ensure close cooperation in the field. and for the general improvement of the forces of all the Contracting States;

f) prepare the necessary data on the resources and military preparedness of each of the Contracting States and the part to be played by the forces of each in the joint military effort;

g) discuss the facilities and various contributions which each of the Contracting States, in conformity with the provisions of this Treaty, might be asked to provide, during a state of war, on behalf of the armies of such other Contracting States as might be operating on its territory.

2. The Permanent Military Commission may form temporary or permanent subcommittees from among its own members to deal with any of the matters within its jurisdiction. It may also seek the advice of any experts whose views on certain questions are deemed necessary.

3. The Permanent Military Commission shall submit detailed reports on the results of its activities and studies to the Joint Defence Council provided for in Article 6 of this Treaty, as well as an annual report giving full particulars of its work and studies during the year.

4. The Permanent Military Commission shall establish its headquarters in Cairo but may hold meetings in any other place the Commission may specify. The Commission shall elect its Chairman for a period of two years: he may be re-elected. Candidates for the chairmanship shall hold at least the rank of a high commanding officer. Each member of the Commission must have as his original nationality that of the Contracting State he represents.

5. In the event of war, the Supreme Command of the joint forces shall be entrusted to the Contracting State possessing the largest military force taking part in actual field operations, unless by unanimous agreement, the Commanderin - Chief is selected otherwise. 3) Each of the contracting parties shall appoint its representatives on the above - mentioned permanent committees. Each party shall have one single vote.

Art. 6 — 1) A Permanent Technical Advisory Office shall be established for the Council of Arab Economic Unity. It shall be made of experts appointed by the Council and shall function under its supervision.

2) The Permanent Technical Office shall execute the study and research work in matters referred to it by the Council or any of its committees. The Office shall submit research work and recommendations that will guarantee harmony and co-ordination in matters within the jurisdiction of the Council.

3) The Council shall establish a central office for statistics. This office shall gather and analyse statistics and publish them when necessary.

Art. 7 — 1) The Council of Arab Economic Unity, together with its subsidiary organs shall constitute one single unit enjoying financial and administrative independence and having its own budget.

2) The council shall draft its own regulations and those of its subsidiary organs.

Art. 8 — During a period not exceeding one month of the date of implementation of this agreement, the governments of the Contracting Parties shall nominate their representatives on the Council and on the committees specified in paragraph (2) of Art. 5 of this agreement, and the Council shall carry out its functions immediately upon its formation. Also, the Council shall immediately form its subsidiary organs.

Art. 9 — The Council of Arab Economic Unity shall carry out, in general, all the duties and powers specified in this agreement and its appendices of which it shall deem necessary for its implementation. In particular, the council shall:

In Administration

a) implement the provisions of this agreement and its appendices and all the regulations and resolutions issued for the implementation of this agreement and its appendices;

b) supervise the working of the committees and the subsidiary organs;

c) appoint the staff and experts for the Council and its subsidiary organs, in accordance with the provisions of this agreement.

In Organization and Legislation

a) draft tariffs, laws and regulations which aim at the establishment of an Arab unified Customs zone and subsequently introduce whatever alterations may be deemed essential;

b) co-ordinate foreign trade policies with a view to streamline the economy of the region in relation to world economy, and to attain the objectives of economic unity as specified in this agreement. The signing of trade and payments agreements with other countries shall take place with the approval of the Council of Arab Economic Unity;

c) co-ordinate economic development activities and draft plans for the execution of common Arab development projects;

d) co-ordinate policies regarding agriculture, industry, and domestic trade;

e) co-ordinate financial and monetary policies as a mean of achieving monetary unity;

f) draft unified transport regulations in the Contracting Countries as well as transit regulations and co-ordinate common policy;

g) draft unified labour and social security legislations and modifying them;

h) co-ordinate taxation and rates laws:

i) draft other legislations concerning matters specified in this agreement and its appendices which are essential to the implementation of this agreement and its appendices;

j) draft and approve the budget of the Council and its subsidiary organs.

Art. 10 — Expenditures of the Council and its subsidiary organs shall be drawn from common revenues. During the period before the realization of such revenues, governments shall participate to these expenditures according to rates fixed by the Council.

Art. 11 — The common revenues of the Council shall be distributed among the governments of the Contracting Parties by agreement among them on the basis of the studies carried out by the Council of Economic Unity. These studies shall be made before the realization of the Customs unity.

Art. 12 — The Council shall perform these and other powers vested in it by this agreement and its appendices by resolutions to be adopted and implemented by the member states in accordance with their own constitutional principles.

Art. 13 — The Governments of the Contracting Parties undertake not to issue in their respective territories any laws, regulations or administrative orders contradictory to this agreement or its appendices.

Transitional Rules

Art. 14 — 1) The implementation of this agreement shall take place in successive stages and in the shortest possible time.

2) The Council of Arab Economic Unity shall, upon its formation, draft a practical plan indicating the stages of implemention and determining the legislative, administrative, and technical measures necessary for each step, taking into consideration the appendix concerning "... the necessary steps for the realization of Arab Economic Unity..." attached to this agreement and constituting an integral part of it.

3) On exercising its duties as specified in this agreement the Council shall take into consideration certain specific circumstances existing in some contracting countries. This shall not undermine the objectives of the Arab Economic Unity.

4) The Council, as well as the Contracting Parties, shall carry out the measures specified in Paragraph (2) of this article according to the terms of this agreement.

Art. 15 — Any two or more of the Contracting Parties shall have the right to conclude economic agreements among themselves with the object of realizing a unity, wider in range, than that stipulated by this agreement.

Ratification, Membership and Withdrawal

Art. 16 — This agreement shall be ratified by the Signatory States according to their constitutional systems in the shortest time possible. Documents of ratification shall be deposited with the Secretariat General of the Arab League who shall prepare the necessary minutes regarding the ratification documents of each state and who shall inform the other Contracting States accordingly.

Art. 17 — States of the Arab League which are not party to this agreement can apply for membership through the Secretary-General of the Arab League who shall announce their membership to the other Contracting States.

Art. 18 — Arab countries which are not members in the League of Arab States can subscribe to this agreement subject to the approval of the Contracting States. Such countries shall apply for membership to the Secretary-General of the League of Arab States who shall advise the Contracting States accordingly for their approval.

Art. 19 — Any of the Contracting Parties can withdraw from this agreement after five calendar years from the end of the transitional period. The withdrawal shall be effective after the lapse of one year from the date of application for withdrawal to the Secretary-General of the League of Arab States.

Art. 20 — This agreement shall go into force three months from the date of deposit of the ratification documents by three of the Signatory States. Regarding other States, the agreement shall go into force one month after the date of deposit of their ratification documents or their application for membership.

In confirmation of the foregoing stipulations, the delegated members, whose names are listed hereinafter, have signed this agreement on behalf and in the name of their governments.

THE ARAB COMMON MARKET

In accordance with the provisions of the agreement for Economic Unity among the Arab League States, the Council of Arab Economic Unity, desirous of achieving social progress and economic prosperity for the Contracting Parties and of establishing economic unity on the sound foundations of continuous and harmonious economic development in keeping with the natural and historical links that exist between them; wishing to achieve economic integration among the Contracting Countries and to consolidate their efforts for the attainment of the most favourable environment for the development of their resources, the raising of their standard of living and the improvement of living conditions, has decided to establish the Arab Common Market with the aim of accomplishing the following:

1 — freedom of movement of persons and capital,

2 — freedom of exchange of national and foreign commodities,

3 — freedom of residence, work, employment and the undertaking of economic activities,

4 — freedom of transport and transit as well as the use of means of transport, seaports and civil airports.

In accordance with the following provisions:

Definitions and Terminology

Art. 1 — The following definitions wherever they occur, shall mean:

1 — Contracting Parties : These are the member States of the Council of Arab Economic Unity.

2 — Restrictions: These are the administrative restrictions imposed by any one of the Contracting Parties on its imports and exports and include the prohibition of importation and exportation, quotas, licences and all other similar restrictions on trade.

3 — Customs and other duties: Customs duties are those duties embodied in the schedule of customs tariffs, while other duties are all duties and taxes, whatever their nomenclature, imposed on imported goods. The following shall not be considered as duties or taxes:

a) all duties, taxes or payments in return for services

b) all duties or taxes imposed on products, or on raw materials used in the manufacture of such products, imported from Contracting Parties where similar domestic products or raw materials are subjected to the same duties and taxes.

4 — Agriculture and animal products and natural resources: These are the products and resources which originate from one of the Contracting Countries and which are imported in their natural form.

5 — Manufactured goods: These are the goods manufactured in any of the Contracting Countries and whose domestic cost of production is not less than 40 per cent of their total cost. Materials imported from any of the Contracting Countries shall be deemed a part of the domestic cost of production.

General Principles

Art. 2 — There shall be freedom of exchange of agricultural and animal products, natural resources and manufactured goods between the Contracting Parties in accordance with the principles and provisions of the following articles.

Art. 3 — Restrictions, duties and taxes on imports and exports — at present in force in the Contracting Countries — shall remain unaltered. None of the said countries shall introduce new duties, taxes or restrictions, or increase existing duties, taxes or restrictions on agricultural and animal products, natural resources and manufactured goods exchanged between themselves.

Art. 4 — The governments of the Contracting Parties shall apply "'the most favoured Nation" principle as between themselves where this treatment is accorded to countries which are not members of the Agreement for Economic Unity, provided that the provisions of this article shall not apply to existing agreements.

Art. 5 — The governments of the Contracting Parties shall not impose duties or excise taxes on agricultural and animal products, natural resources and manufactured goods exchanged between themselves which exceed the duties or excise taxes imposed on similar domestic products or on the raw materials used in the manufacture of such products.

Art. 6 — No export duties shall be levied on agricultural and animal products, natural resources and manufactured goods exchanged between the Contracting Countries.

Art. 7 — 1) The re-exportation, outside the Market, of agricultural and animal products, of natural resources and manufactured goods, which have been exchanged between the Contracting Countries, shall be prohibited, unless permission from the exporting country has been obtained and provided that the said products, resources and goods have not undergone any manufacturing process which has given them the characteristics of domestically manufactured goods in the importing country.

2) The re-exportation, to any Contracting Country, of agricultural and animal products, natural resources and domestically manufactured goods which have been exchanged between the Contracting Countries shall be prohibited where the said products, resources and goods have been subsidized and there exists similar domestic production in the country to which these products have been re-exported.

Art. 8 — Subsidization: Contracting Countries shall not grant any subsidy whatsoever to domestic products exported to other Contracting Parties, where similar products exist in the importing countries.

Art. 9 — Concessions and monopolies in existence in the Contracting Countries shall not obstruct the application of the provisions of the Arab Common Market.

Exchange of Agriculture and Animal Products and Natural Resources.

Art. 10 — The following provisions shall apply until a technical committee, formed by the Council of Economic Unity, has prepared more detailed tables for the Arab Common Market:

1 — Agricultural and animal products and natural resources listed in Table A, which is annexed to the Treaty for the Facilitation of Trade and Organization of Transit Trade and its first three amendments, concluded between the Arab League States, and which originate from one of the Contracting Parties, shall be exempt from customs and other duties and taxes when exchanged between the Contracting Countries. As regards agricultural and animal products and natural resources which are not included in the aforementioned table, these shall enjoy a reduction of 20 per cent per annum, in all duties and taxes as from the beginning of 1965.

2 — All Contracting Countries shall endeavour to remove restrictions on the said products at the rate of 20 per cent of such products, in five annual stages, as from the beginning of 1965.

Exchange of Manufactured Goods

Art. 11 — The followinvg provisions shall apply until a technical committeee, formed by the Council of Economic Unity, has prepared detailed tables for the Arab Common Market.

1 — Customs and all other duties on manufactured goods which originate from one of the Contracting Countries shall be reduced by 10 per cent per annum as from the beginning of 1965. As regards manufactured goods listed in Table B, which is annexed to the Treaty for the Facilitation of Trade and the Organization of Transit Trade and its first three amendments and which at present enjoy a reduction of 25 per cent in customs duties, and also manufactured goods listed in Table C, and which at present enjoy a reduction of 50 per cent in customs duties, the following percentage cuts shall apply;

Date	% reductions in customs and other duties on manufactured goods listed in Table B
1/1/1965	35 per cent
1/1/1966	45 per cent
1/1/1967	55 per cent
1/1/1968	65 per cent
1/1/1969	75 per cent

1/1/1970	85 per cent
1/1/1971	95 per cent
1/4/1971	100 per cent

% reductions in customs and other duties on goods listed in Table C

60 per cent
70 per cent
80 per cent
90 per cent
100 per cent

2 — The Contracting Parties shall endeavour to remove restrictions on manufactured goods exchanged between them at the rate of 10 per cent per annum of these goods, in ten annual instalments, as from the begining of 1965.

Common Provision

Art. 12 — Two month before the commencement of each annual instalment of the Arab Common Market, all Contracting Parties shall submit to the Council of Arab Economic Unity the following:

1 — A list of the agricultural and animal products and natural resources which shall be liberalized during the next stage and which represent 20 per cent of the said products.

2 — A list of the manufactured goods which shall be liberalized during the next stage and which represents 10 per cent of such goods.

Art. 13 — All Contracting Parties shall submit to the Council of Arab Economic Unity, not later than 1 st November 1964, the following:

1 — A complete list of all the restrictions imposed on imports or exports of agricultural and animal products and natural resources and manufactured goods:

2 — A complete list of all customs and other duties, and taxes imposed on imports and exports.

3 — A complete list of all excise taxes and duties levied on manufactured goods and agricultural and animal products.

4 — A complete list of all duties charged in return for services;

5 — A complete list of all national products which receive any subsidies whatsoever and the amounts of such subsidies. The Council of Arab Economic Unity shall be informed of any changes which may occur in this list.

Art. 14 — Each Contracting Country shall have the right to apply to the Council of Arab Economic Unity for the exclusion of certain products from the duty and tax exemptions or reductions applied and from the removal of restrictions by reason of real and justifiable causes. The Council of Arab Economic Unity shall have the power to approve such exemptions and shall determine their duration for specific periods of time which shall not exceed the stage stipulated.

Art. 15 — Certificate of Origin: All goods which enjoy exemption or customs preference shall be accompanied by a certificate of origin issued by a responsible Government authority. The Customs authorities of each Contracting Country shall have the power to take all the necessary measures to ensure the conformity of the goods with the certificate of origin.

Settlement of Current Transactions

Art. 16 — Until the Contracting Parties have established an Arab Payments Union and an Arab Monetary Fund to achieve the convertibility of their currencies, as between themselves, the following provisions shall apply:

1 — Payment for goods and services exchanged between the Contracting Countries shall be settled in accordance with the Bilateral Payments Agreements in effect between them;

Where no Bilateral Payments Agreement exists between two of the Contracting Parties, settlement of the payments in the foregoing paragraph shall be effected in US dollars, Pounds Sterling, or in any other convertible currency acceptable to the two parties concerned. In such circumstances, the two parties undertake to permit the transfer of all sums due to the exporting country without delay.

Executive Provisions

Art. 17 — In pursuance of the provisions of Art. 12 of this agreement for Economic Unity among Arab League States, the Contracting Parties shall implement the provisions of this resolution, in accordance with the constitutional principles of their respective countries.

THE ARAB FUND FOR ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL DEVELOPMENT

During recent years, most Arab countries — as many other developing countries — have resorted to economic and social development planning. However, while some Arab countries are short of foreign financial resources to help carrying out their development programmes, especially in the early stages of development, some others — mainly large oil producers — have got ample surpluses to invest abroad. The idea to channel part of such surpluses for investment in needy Arab countries had often been raised and discussed informally.

After the Israeli attack against neighbouring Arab countries in June 1967, closer Arab cooperation became urgent. This obvious fact was submitted by the Kuwaiti Government to the Conference of Arab Ministers of Finance, Economy and Petroleum held in Baghdad on 15 August 1967. An agreement was signed on 16 May 1968 by the member countries of the Arab League, together with Abu Dhabi, Bahrain and Qatar for the establishment of the «Arab Fund for Economic and Social Development», to act within the framework of the economic cooperation provided by the Charter of the Arab League.

According to the agreement, the Fund would be an autonomous legal body,located in Kuwait, which would be empowered to establish agencies or branch offices elsewhere. All properties and assets of the Fund wherever located would be immune from restriction, requisition, confiscation, expropriation and any other similar act.

Joint Projets

The urgent need of certain Arab countries for financial resources to make up for the economic losses sustained as a result of the Israeli aggression of June 1967 and to resume their economic activity would call for the completion of the ratification procedures as soon as possible so that they might take advantage of the Fund's resources under Article II of the agreement, which states that the Fund's basic target is to offer financial and technical contribution towards the execution of economic and social development projects in Arab countries, especially vital and joint Arab projects. The Fund would also encourage the investment of public and private capital in Arab countries either directly or indirectly and include technical aid in various fields of development. In all cases such loans and aids would be extented on easy terms in relation to both cost and duration.

In pursuance of its objectives, the Fund would be authorized to borrow from local foreign financial institutions and markets, guarantee the securities of those entreprises in which it would invest, buy and sell securities it would have issued or guaranteed or in which it would have issued or guaranteed or in which it would have invested, and invest surplus funds in giltedged securities.

Membership and Subscriptions

Membership of the Arab Fund would be confined to member States of the Arab League and other Arab countries who would have subscribed to the Fund's capital before July 1,1968. However, membership could also be extended to any other Arab country on the approval of the Board of Governors.

The Board of Governors might also decide to accept subscriptions to the capital of the Fund from public or private arab financial institutions and organisations. No member country might withdraw before the lapse of five years from the commencement of membership. In certain cases specified by the agreement, membership might be suspended on terms that preserve the rights of both parties, after one year of suspension, unless otherwise decided by a majority vote.

The Fund's capital

The Fund's authorised capital of Kuwait Dinar (KD) 100 million (kd × 2.48823 grammes of fine gold) is divided into 10,000 shares of 10,000 dinars each. In case of change in the par value of the Kuwaiti Dinar in terms of gold, the capital would be revalued so as to be equal at all times to 248828 kg of fine gold. Each member country is required to pay 10 per cent of its subscription when the instruments of ratification are deposited, and another 10 per cent when the agreement goes into force. The balance would be paid in six equal annual instalments, starting one year after the Fund commences operations. Stockholding would not be pledged or encumbered in any manner whatsoever, and would not be transferable except to the Fund. Other countries that might join the Fund after the agreement comes into force would pay a percentage of their subcriptions equal to what founder members would have paid at any time.

During the thirteenth session of the Arab Economic Council, member countries had fixed their subscriptions with the exception of Tunisia, Saudi Arabia, Morocco, Bahrain together with Abu Dhabi and Qatar — which, however, have determined their subscriptions of late. Up to the end of June 1978, subscriptions so far promised by various members of the Fund's authorised capital reached the equivalent of KD 53.21 million subscribed as follows:

Kuwait = KD 30 million — Egypt KD = 7 million — Iraq KD = 5 million — Abu Dhabi KD = 3 million — Algeria and Syria KD = 2 million each, and Jordan, Sudan and Libya KD = 1 million each, and KD 1,21 million for Lebanon, the Arab Republic of Yemen, Qatar and the People's Democratic Republic of Yemen, altogether. The capital might be increased by the absolute majority of voting members, to meet the entry of new members, or otherwise by no less than 75 per cent of the total voting power; and in such a case each member country would have the right to subscribe with its quota in the Fund's capital.

Other Resources

In addition to the paid-in capital and reserves, the Fund would be able to augment its ordinary resources by borrowings whether through the issue of bonds, or through credits opened by Arab nationals and Arab public and private institutions, as well as by international organisations. The value of the bonds to be issued by the Fund would not exceed twice its capital unless agreement has been reached by a special decision taken by two thirds voting majority of the Board of Governors.

The agreement provides that 10 per cent of the annual net profit would be allocated to build up a general reserve fund. The Board of Governors might allocate another portion for the formation of a supplementary reserve. The remaining balance would then be distributed among member countries in accordance with their subscriptions.

Board Meetings and Quorum

The Fund would be managed by a Board of Governors, a Board of Directors, a president, and such officers and staff as might be considered necessary. The Board of Governors which is vested with all managerial powers, would consist of a governor and a deputy, appointed by each member country for a period of five years, and would be presided over by a chairman, to be elected for one year from among the Governors. The Board would meet at least once a year or whenever requested to do so by three members having 25 per cent of the total voting power. Apart from certain powers (including notably the admission of new members, the increase of the authorised capital, the suspension of members and the termination of the Fund's operations), the Boardof Governors might delegate other powers to the Board of Directors. Each member country would have 200 votes plus one vote for each share of its holding of the capital stock.

The Board of Directors, composed of four elected members — other than governors ot their deputies — for a renewable period of two years, would be generally responsible for conducting the Fund's operations. The Board of Governors would appoint, from outside the two Boards, a general manager who presides over the Board of Directors with no voting right except in the case of a tie, and would be responsible for all the Fund's business under the supervision of the Board of Directors.

A majority of the Directors would constitute a quorum for any meeting of the Board, provided such majority represents no less than two-thirds of the total voting power of the members.

Unless otherwise explicitly provided for in the agreement, all matters submitted to the Board of Directors would be devided by a majority of the voting power represented at the meeting.

CULTURAL ACTIVITIES

Although the Arab States were inspired, in the organization of their league, by a community of political, economic and social interests, the Arabs have always been knit together by a unity of ideals and by a spiritual and intellectual affinity which, above all things, make for mutual co-operation, sympathy and understanding.

How to regulate, direct and consolidate these ties was one of the questions that confronted the Arab Congress Preparatory Committee, whose task it was to lay the foundations of the Arab League. A Cultural Committee was created to frame the rules for a uniform cultural policy to achieve close collaboration and consolidation of efforts throughout the Arab World. The outcome was a Cultural Treaty derived, from the experience of progressive nations, which designated the main cultural activities and prescribed the best methods and policies. On November 27th 1945, the treaty, with a few alterations was ratified by the Arab League Council.

The Text of the Cultural Treaty

Art. 1 — The Member States of the League do hereby agree to establish each in its respective country, a local organization whose function shall be the promotion and development of cultural cooperation between Arab States. Each State shall have full freedom to choose the way in which such organization is to be formed.

Art. 2 — Member States agree to the exchange of professors and teachers between their respective schools and institutions in accordance with such general or individual conditions as shall be agreed upon between them. The duration of service of exchanged professors or teachers who are Government officials, shall be reckoned as part of their Government service, entitling them to retain their original Government posts with the consequent rights to promotion and pension.

Art. 3 — Member States agree to the exchange of students and pupils between their schools and institutions. These shall be admitted to the classes for which they are fitted, within the limits of the places available , due regard being paid to regulations governing such schools and institutions. To facilitate such an exchange, the Member States, with due observance of the fundamental educational principles applied in their respective countries, shall endeavour to standardize educational stages and certificates. Such procedure shall be governed by specific agreements concluded between the respective States.

Each Member State shall also extend to the country or countries concerned all possible facilities for the establishment of residential quarters for the accomodation of their respective pupils.

Art. 4 — Member States shall endeavour to encourage cultural tours as well as scouting and sport excursions, to those areas of their countries to which access is allowed by their respective Governments. They shall also encourage the holding of cultural and educational conferences for the benefit of students, and extend all possible facilities for such purposes, particularly with regard to travel and the reduction of travelling expenses.

Art. 5 — Member States agree to the establishment in their respective countries of educational and scientific institutes by any other Member State.

Art. 6 — Member States shall co-operate with one another for the revival, preservation and dissemination of the Arabs' legacy to Art and Literature, so as to make such legacy available to all scholars.

Art. 7 — To keep pace with the world's intellectual movement, the Member States shall encourage the translation from foreign languages of works of famous authors, classical or modern, and coordinate all efforts exerted in this direction.

They shall also encourage intellectual production in the Arab countries by diverse methods such as the establishment of Library and scientific research institutes amongst writers and authors, awarding prizes for the best achievements in Literature, Science and Art.

Art. 8 — Member States shall undertake to enact legislation sateguarding literary, scientific and art copyright in their respective countries.

Art. 9 — Member States shall endeavour to unify scientific expressions and terms through the medium of joint congresses, conferences and committees to be organized for the purpose, and through bulletins to be published by these bodies. They shall also endeavour to develop and promote the Arabic language so as to make it capable of rendering all modern literary and scientific expressions, and to make Arabic the medium for teaching all subjects in all educational stages throughout the Arab countries.

Art. 10 — Member States shall endeavour to strengthen relations between public libraries, and scientific, historical and art museums in their respective countries by various means such as the exchange of literary works, indexes, replicas of ancient relics, and facsimiles. They shall also endeavour to exchange technical and scientate co-operation between scientific experts and excavation missions by means of agreements to be concluded between the respective States.

Art. 11 — Member States agree to strengthen relations and facilitate co-operation between scientists, scholars, journalists, people engaged in free professions, and persons connected with the stage, the cinema, music and broadcasting — wherever these may exist — through the organization of visits from one country to another.

They shall also encourage, for the same purpose, the holding of cultural, educational and scientific conferences, the placing of adequately equipped research centres and laboratories belonging to the various scientific institutions of each country at the disposal of the scientists and scholars of other countries for the conducting and demonstration of scientific researches, and the publication of periodic bulletins on all works written and researches made in all Arab countries.

They shall make it obligatory for all authors and publishers to present copies of all publications issued by them to the Cultural Committee of the League for preservation in its library and for distribution to public libraries in each State.

Art. 12 — Member States agree to introduce into the educational syllabuses for their respective countries literary, geographical and historical subjects sufficient to enable students to form a clear idea about the life and civilisation of the other Arab countries. They shall also endeavour to establish an Arabic Library for pupils in each State.

Art. 13 — Member States shall endeavour to acquaint their nationals with the cultural, social, economic and political conditions of the other Arab States through the medium of radio, the theatre, the cinema, the press and any other media, also through the foundation of museums for Arab culture and civilisation, adequately equipped by them and by other Member States to ensure success, and through the organization of periodic art and literary exhibitions and school festivals in the different Arab countries.

Art. 14 — Member States shall encourage the establishment of Arab cultural and social clubs in their respective countries.

Art. 15 — Member States shall adopt all measures necessary to ensure the closest similarity possible in matters of legislation. They shall also endeavour to unify their laws, whenever that is practicable, and to introduce comparative legal study of Arab countries into the syllabuses of their respective educational institutions.

Art. 16 — This Treaty shall be ratified by the undersigned States in accordance with their respective constitutional regulations at the earliest possible date. The instruments of ratification shall be entrusted for safe custody to the Secretariat - General of the League which shall draw up a separate report registering the deposit of the ratification instrument of each country and shall communicate the fact to other Member States.

Art. 17 — Other Arab countries may join this Treaty by notifying such a desire to the Secretary - General of the League, who shall in turn communicate the fact to Member States.

Art. 18 — The Treaty shall come into force one month after the deposit of the ratification instruments by two Member States. The same applies to the other States that ratify the Treaty after it has come into force.

Art. 19 — Any State bound by the obligations of this Treaty may withdraw therefrom by notifying the Secretary - General to that effect. Withdrawal shall take effect six months after the despatch of such a notice.

CULTURAL AGREEMENT WITH UNESCO

The United Nations Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organization and the League of Arab States agree to co-operate with each other through their appropriate bodies.

This co-operation shall extend to all matters that arise in the field of education, science and culture and are connected with those tasks and activities of the two Organizations that are in harmony.

Mutual Consultation

The United Nations Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organization and the League of Arab States shall consult each other regularly on matters of common interest, with a view to co-ordinating their efforts to accomplish those of their tasks and activities which are in harmony.

The United Nations Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organization shall inform the League of Arab States of any proposals which, owing to their nature and the cultural region in which they are to be carried out, appear likely to be of direct interest to the League of Arab States, and shall consider any observations on such proposals which may be conveyed to it by the League of Arab States with a view to establishing effective coordination between the two Organizations.

Similarly, the League of Arab States shall inform the United Nations Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organization of any proposals for the development of its activities in matters of interest to the United Nations Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organization and shall consider any observations on such proposals which may be conveyed to it by the United Nations Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organization with a view to establishing effective coordination between the two Organizations.

The United Nations Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organization and the League of Arab States shall, after consulting with each other, take all appropriate steps to ensure that the organs of each of them are kept fully informed concerning relevant activities of the other Organization when these organs are considering questions which have a bearing on these activities.

The appropriate steps referred to in paragraph 3 may also include invitation to the Organization concerned to be represented at meetings when matters relating to its activities are to be discussed.

Whenever circumstances so require, consultation shall take place between the representatives of the two Organizations to determine jointly the most effective methods of dealing with particular problems of interest to both Organizations.

These methods may, for instance, include the establishment of joint committees.

Joint Action

The United Nations Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organization and the League of Arab States may, through special agreements, together decide upon joint action with a view to attaining objects of common interest.

These special agreements shall define the ways in which each of the two Organizations shall participate in such action and shall specify the financial commitments that each is to assume.

Exchange of Information and Documents

Subject to such arrangements as may be necessary for the safeguarding of confidential documents or information, the two Organizations shall arrange for a full and prompt exchange of documents and information concerning matters of common interest.

Statistical and Legal Information

The two Organizations shall concert their efforts to secure the best use of statistical and legal information and to ensure the most effective utilization of their resources in the assembling, analysis, publication and diffusion of such information, with a view to reducing the burden on the governments and other organizations from which such information is collected.

3 - THE MAGHREB PERMANENT CONSULTATIVE COMMITTEE

- The Maghreb

Once called the Barbary Coast, North West Africa, is now restrictively known by its Arabic name "al-Maghrib". It is composed of four Arab States joined by a Community Pact: Libya, Algeria, Morocco and Mauritania.

Geographically, the eastern limit of North West Africa can be taken as the Libyan - Egyptian and Libyan Sudanese frontiers. In the North the area is limited by the Mediterranean sea, in the west by the Atlantic, in the South by the Sahara.

As in the rest of the Arab World, the fertile inhabited areas of North West Africa are really islands, set not in the sea but in the desert or between the desert and the sea. Apart from the scattered oases of the South, there is in the West and in the North a long, narrow coastal strip of about 2,600 miles long and rarely more than 50-100 miles deep, though it widens out a little on the Atlantic coast where the Moroccan plains are cut off from the desert by the lofty ranges of the Atlas Mountains.

The majority of the Maghreb belongs to the Mediterranean world which was at one time the home of Greco-Roman civilization, and formed part of the Roman Empire.

Roughly three-quarters of the population of the whole area speak Arabic as their mother-tongue, and one-quarter Berber. A knowledge of French is common among the Muslim upper and middle classes in Algeria, Tunisia and the former French zone of Morocco; Italian and English in Libya. In Arabic which is the mother-tongue of the people who are now resuming control of North West Africa, the area is known as the "al-Maghrib al-Arabi".

The Coming of the Arabs

Fundamental change in the history of the Maghreb was brought about by the coming of the Arabs; these first appeared in Libya in 642 A.D., only nine year after the death of the Prophet Muhammad. It took them very little time to overthrow the Byzantine regime, but about a century more to subdue the resistance of the Berbers. When they had done so they had established not so much the rule of Arabs in North Africa, but the Arabic language and the Islamic Culture. The administration which was established was very congenial to the mass of the populations.

During 800 years of Arab rule, four dynasties succeeded one another in North West Africa. The first were Aghlabids (800-909) with their capital in Kairaoun. The next dynasty, the Fatimids (909-1069) propagated a heretical form of Islam. After establishing themselves in Tunisia, they moved through Tripolitania, conquered Egypt and founded Cairo. This they made their capital, leaving North Africa to be administered by their tributaries, the Ziries. Then the Fatimid Caliph in Cairo let two nomad Arab tribes establish themselves in those areas (the Beni Hilal and the Beni Sulaim). They inaugurated a period of anarchy, further increased by the Norman capture of a number of coast towns during the twelfth century especially in Libya which found it hard to recover afterwards. This was ended by the arrival of Almohad forces from Morocco. In the thirteenth century a new dynasty, the Hafsids, arose. The Hafsids period was one of relative peace and of extensive trade relations with Europe.

In Tripoli and Tunisia hereditary dynasties of foreign origin were founded. That in Tunis, originated with a Cretan Muslim, Hussain Bey, in 1705 and members of the family continued to reign for 252 years until the last Bey, Amine, was deposed on the proclamation of the Tunisian Republic on 25 July 1957. In Libya, a great religious leader Sayyid Muhammad Ali as-Sanussi founded the Sanussi sect in 1843. Both the Tunisian and Tripolitanian reigning families became largely arabized. Several powers, including France, who was interested in the coral fisheries, and England maintained Consuls for the purpose of facilitating trade. Algiers became an oligarchic republic. The ruler of the state, the Dey, was elected for life by the Diwan of Principal officers of State.

European Rule

French rule was established in Algeria in 1830 in a colonized way, with no hope whatsoever of equal citizenship, with a terrible contrast in the standards of living of European and of Arab communities. The country was not conquered but became a protectorate, retaining its monarchy and something of its former administration, though in practice all authority was soon in the hands of French officials. The next stage in the European occupation of North Africa was the Italian invasion of Libya in 1911 which was presented as a liberation from Turkish government. Finally Morocco in 1912 was occupied jointly by France (Treaty of Fez) and Spain. French regime in Morocco was more auspicious than that in Tunisia. In the incredibly short time of forty years, Morocco was brought out of its isolation and freed from the medieval fetters of the spirit in which it had been bound. Though Morocco had been occupied by diplomatic methods and the protectorate established by the Treaty of Fez, there were areas where no recognition was paid to this order, in fact two regions both of them primarily Berber, were particularly involved; one was the Rif, the other the Anti-Atlas. The fighting was never more than the reduction of outlying and stubornly independent tribes. In 1934 the process was completed and the whole of south Morocco with the Moroccan Sahara beyond it was brought under French administration. Since the Sanussi were reduced to submission two years earlier in Libya, the whole Maghreb had at last been brought under the rule of France, Italy and Spain, except for Tangier.

In 1934, which saw the completion of the occupation, began in Tunisia the birth of a dynastic new nationalist party, the Neo-Destour, under the leadership of the President of Independent Tunisia Habib Bourguiba.

In Morocco, a significant nationalist demonstration because of a visit by Muhammad V to Fez led to the termination of the French protectorate within twenty-five years.

The Maghreb and the Arab League

Libya then Morocco, Tunisia and Algeria entered the Arab League because of a powerful bond of sentiment which binds them to the Arab world in general. Another Pact which reunited the four countries of the Maghreb was signed at Tunis, in October 1st 1964, and called for the setting up of The Maghreb Permanent Consultative Committee.

ARAB OIL AND THE WORLD OIL INDUSTRY TODAY

The last few years have witnessed major and unprecedented changes in the world oil industry characterised by feverish search for new oilfields to supplement production from traditional suppliers. Strikes in numerous regions in the Arab World, e.g. in Libya, Abu Dhabi and Oman have very substantially boosted proven reserves to which the new North Sea finds must now be added.

But rising world demand and the widening gap between energy production and consumption in a number of major industrialised countries have set a premium on oil as a source of energy.

Crude oil imports by the USA, to cite an example in point, moved from 185 million tons in 1971 to 230 million tons in 1972 and reached 300 million tons in 1973 before skyrocketing to 600 million tons in 1980 and no less than 1,000 million tons by 1985 according to oil experts. Western Europe and Japan are also expected to follow almost the same rising trend in the years under review.

Capital investments in the oil industry are equally impressive. Out of total annual investments for industrial development in the USA amounting to 43 billion dollars, an average of 16 billion dollars goes to energy production and Government planners estimate that some 400-500 billion dollars will have to be allocated to the energy sector alone between 1971 and 1985, viz at an annual average of 30 billion dollars.

Meanwhile, the international oil companies find themselves up against increasing difficulties. On the one hand, they have to satisfy demands from host Governments calling for a larger share in production and profit, and, on the other, overcome competition from national oil corporations set up by these Governments, but which may be a matter for concern, especially at a time when other problems claim the attention of the oil companies, notably stepping up output in existing concessions or diversifying their sources of supply.

Within this context of the last decade, with production rising to about one-third of world output as compared with one-fifth in 1960 and reserves amounting to more than one half of world reserves. As for refining, it now stands at 9% of world refining capacity — a ratio which is out of proportion with Arab crudes production, Arab reserves and Arab investments.

Oil as a Source of Energy

Sources of energy in 1960 stood as follows:

Oil	30%
Coal	51%
Natural Gas	12%
Electricity	6.6%
Nuclear	0.1%

By 1980 the relative importance of these individual sources of energy was substantially altered as indicated under:

Oil	43.6%
Coal	29.4%
Natural Gas	18.6%
Electricity	6.0%
Nuclear	2.4%

Thus in 1980, oil represented about one half of world energy demand, as a whole, and 36% of US energy consumption.

Consumption

World oil consumption fell by 3.9% in 1980 to 3,001,400,000 tons, compared with 3,124,300,000 tons in 1979. Excluding the Soviet Union, East European countries and China (which together accounted for 20.9% of the 1980 total) consumption fell by 5.2%.

Reserves

Meanwhile world oil reserves doubled over the last decade. Through the discovery of new productive fields and better up-to-date assessment, world reserves which in 1961 totalled 368,753 million barrels reached 649,200 million barrels in December 1979.

At the end of 1980 the world's estimated "published proved" reserves of oil stood at 88.9 thousand million tons, and 2,639.6 million million cubic feet of gas.

1980 Oil Production

World oil production fell by 4.7% to 3,074 million tons in 1980, compared with 3,225,300,000 tons in 1979. The three largest producers remained the Soviet Union, Saudi Arabia and the United States, according to the British Petroleum Company's "Statistical Review of the World Oil Industry 1980" published in mid-1981. Total US production represented 5.7% of world production and comprised 427,900,000 tonnes of crude oil and 55,700,000 tonnes of natural gas liquids (compared with 424,700,000 tonnes and 56,200,000 tonnes respectively in 1979).

The industrialised world's growing dependence on Arab oil to meet its energy needs is dictated by the logic of geography and economics. In addition to the relative ease and low cost at which Arab oil is produced, the potential of increasing oil production is greater in the Arab world than elsewhere. The Arab world's abundant reserves will supply the world with oil for many years, as is clear from the reserve / production ratio for 1975. Non- Opec reserves are expected to last for 21 years at 1975 and 1976 production rate and OPEC reserves for 45 years. The reserves of Arab OPEC member States taken alone are estimated to last for 55 years.

Future increases in oil production are therefore anticipated to depend more and more on Arab oil resources. The Arab States account for 55% of total world reserves, and Arab oil production equals one third the world total and about two thirds of OPEC production. Since the Arab States still stand at the threshold of industrialisation, only a small proportion of Arab oil production is consumed in these States themselves. The Mideast area has long been the main supplier of incremental increases in world oil consumption. Oil production in the Arab States has doubled every seven years, outstripping the growth rate of production elsewhere.

Refining

Although the Arab countries control more than half the world's crude oil reserves and produce the third of its oil, their share in non-communist world refining capacity still stands at less than 4%. Even after the completion of new refineries and the expansion of others, the Arab share would remain at less than 9%.

These figures reflect a lag in the development of the Arab refining industry that is directly attributable to the former policies of multinational oil companies. In contrast to the years immediately preceding World War II, when refineries were located in producing areas, the oil companies have sited new refineries in the consuming countries, preferring to limit imports from the Arab States to crude oil. These policies are in conformity with the strategy of industrialised countries to reap the added value accruing to crude oil processing and to promote their own welfare, technological development and employment, plus to guarantee oil supplies by diversifying sources of crude oil imports and concentrating refining capacity in their own states.

The problem requiring attention at present is not only limited to the need of raising Arab refining output within the framework of a plan for gradually shifting from exports of crude oil to exports of refined products. It also concerns the need for a joint Arab policy on investment in export refining capacity and the exporting of products that would counteract the strategy of the Western industrialised states. The present surplus in refining capacity has failed to stop the industrialised states from going ahead with further investments in the industry. Since surplus capacity will thus persist for some time, these states are likely to feel compelled to protect their investments by obstructing in one way or another, the export of refined products from the Arab countries. To cite an example in point, the Western European countries, despite their expressed concern over substantial surpluses in their share of approximately 35% of total world refining capacity, plan further investments in the industry. The expansion of refining capacity is part of their stragegy to diversify sources of imported oil, guarantee oil supplies and accelerate their industrial development.

Options for Utilisation of Arab Natural Gas

The Arab oil producing countries undeniably took a major step when they decided to begin utilising their natural gas. However, the next step, to decide what projects would best utilise this gas, has elicited various views.

One view holds that gas would most profitably be used if reinjected in oil fields to increase recovery rates. Another view favours rationalising gas utilisation for processing it for petrochemical and fertilizer production. Finally, some prefer that gas be used as fuel for Arab refineries, as in this way a quantity of fuel oil equivalent to 600cu.ft. of gas for every barrel refined would then be freed for other uses.

The prevailing trend, however, is for gas to be liquified for export, an exhorbitantly costly process of collecting, purifying, liquifying and then transporting the liquified gas in special tankers to market ports, where it is regasified. Besides realising the lowest level of profit, liquified gas exports to foreign markets are strongly price competitive with oil products, particularly fuel oil exported by Arab refineries.

Unlike gas liquefaction for export, the above three options promise optimum returns from the utilisation of natural gas. Since gas liquefaction is important for the production of a number of commodities, a considerable part of the production of those costly liquefaction projects now underway in some OAPEC member countries might alternatively and more profitably be used in petrochemical and fertiliser plants for the production of plastics, fibers, industrial detergents and synthetic rubber.

NATURAL GAS

A change is taking place in the energy supply potential of the crude oil-producing countries — not least the Arab countries of the Middle East and North Africa - as a result of the new status of natural gas. These countries have now, in effect, four saleable energy products available directly or indirectly from their oilfields: crude oil, petroleum products, natural gas and liquified petroleum gases.

Each of these four products has its own marketing sphere in which it is plainly sound policy to promote sales to the utmost extent consistent with acceptable prices; but each product also to a greater or lesser extent overlaps the others in both domestic and export markets.

The coming-of-age of natural gas which is now occuring is due partly to technological advance in the transport of gas to overseas markets, and partly to overall economic progress creating local markets for gas in the countries where it is produced. Natural gas already, of course, for decades previously was a significant contributor to energy requirements in the United States and in a few other countries. But, predominantly, natural gas reserves have been discoverd in places such as the Arab oil countries which are far distant from the world's main energy - consuming areas. Only recently have these areas been brought potentially within economic reach, by the development of techniques for transporting refrigerated gases — both liquified natural gas and liquified petroleum gases — long distances by sea. Almost simultaneously the economic progress of some of the oil and gas-producing countries has created opportunities for the largescale local utilisation of this valuable natural resource.

At present there are several instances in the Arab countries, of an actual functioning programme of liquified natural gas supplies. One is Conch-Methane's export of natural gas from Arzew in Algeria to the U.K. and France, now running at a combined total of 150 million cu.ft. daily. The gas supplies of this project come from the Hassi R'Mel gasfield in the Sahara.

Another is Esso's for shipping gas from its Libyan oilfields to supply both Spain and Italy, respectively at 110 million and 235 million cu. ft. daily. In the Western Hemisphere Phillips - Marathon supply natural gas from Alaska to the Tokyo Gas Co. in Japan. A fourth project which might by now have been agreed, has fallen victim to the discovery of natural gas in considerable volumes in the British sector of the North Sea. This was a Conch plan to transport 100 million cu. ft. daily from Nigeria to the U.K.

An altogether simpler and less costly operation is the ocean transport of refrigerated LPG's available in considerable volumes from associated gas in the oilfields.

The other avenue for natural gas development in the Arab oil-producing countries is through the encouragement of the local markets. In Kuwait, for example, the petrochemical facilities, the Kuwait National Petroleum Company's refinery and other industrial facilities at Shuaiba promoted by the government, are expected between them to require more than 200 million cu. ft. daily of natural gas. In Saudi Arabia, likewise, vigorous efforts are being made to initiate petrochemical production as well as other industrial activity which would utilise natural gas. The other major crude oil exporting nation in the Middle East is Iraq; and here also plans are being actively pursued to increase the local use of natural gas. The principal project at present is for a 16- inch pipeline to transport some 90 million cu. ft. daily of natural gas from the Kirkuk oilfield to Baghdad, together with an 8$^{5}/_{8}$ inch natural gas liquids pipeline to transport 8,500b/d.

These are the initial stages of a long - term development which over the next 20 years or so should witness a very substantial expansion of natural gas demand in the Arab oil-producing countries, representing a major stimulus to their economic growth.

Flaring of Gas

The problem of gas flared due to lack of market outlets is a big one which has caused anxiety for many years.

Significant inroads on it are now at last beginning to be made, particularly in Kuwait where it has proved practical and desirable from an engineering viewpoint to undertake major reinjection schemes with the dual purpose of increasing the ultimate recovery of oil and of conserving gas. In Saudi Arabia also some big injection plans have been put into effect. These reinjection programmes play a large part in the avoidance of gas flaring; but in some oilfields injection is unsuitable and this way of conserving gas is not open.

Throughout the Middle East efforts are being made to develop industrial activities which will be founded on natural gas, including petrochemical facilities requiring gas as raw material as well as fuel.

The problem of gas flaring, however, is likely to be with us for some years yet. Flaring in the Arab oil countries totalled an average of 3,500 million cu. ft. daily or 80 per cent of the total gas production of about 4,500 million cu. ft. daily. Their crude oil production is certain to continue to grow rapidly. If we suppose that it may double in the next ten years, then it may be expected that natural gas production from oilwells will also approximately double to reach perhaps 9,000 million cu. ft. daily by 1980.

Estimates for Kuwait indicate that a very sharp rise in gas utilisation is taking place there, to reach perhaps 900 million cu. ft. daily or as much as 75% of average total gas production.

Basic Handicap

Natural gas suffers from the handicap that although it can now technically be transported long distances by sea it is inherently more costly to transport than oil. This is due essentially to the fact that calories in the form of gas, even when liquified, occupy larger volume than in the form of oil, entirely apart from the costly problem of insulation, etc... In round figures an LNG tanker of the same deadweight tonnage as an oil tanker costs approximately twice as much to build but can carry only about half the therms that the oil tanker can. Thus per therm transported, the capital cost is roughly four times greater for gas than for oil.

In addition to the high cost of natural - gas transport by sea, costly facilities are required for liquifaction, deliquifaction and storage of the gas. An overriding factor is the limited number of markets potentially able to absorb substantial supplies of imported gas. A working minimum market for economic operation is about 50 million cu. ft. daily; but there are comparatively few places in the world which can offer potential gas markets of this size for town gas. There may, however, be opportunities for bulk supplies to industrial users although these will necessarily have to be at lower prices.

Taking all these factors into account it is unlikely that many new viable projects for LNG will come forward in the next few years. In the long-term, however, the position may be quite different. On the one hand, continuing advances in the techniques of transporting and storing LNG — including the use of bigger LNG tankers, for instance — will appreciably reduce the costs of LNG supply. On the other hand, the markets for gas will be much bigger. During the next ten to twenty years Western Europe will become increasingly gas - oriented, basing its sharply rising use of gas on the very big Slochteren gasfields in the Netherlands, on discoveries in the North Sea and other fields in the Netherlands, Germany and elsewhere, some already discovered, some yet to be found. But the probability is that the unit cost of finding and developing still further reserves of natural gas in Western Europe will begin to increase after a certain point. And at that time the extremely large, low - cost resources of the crude-oil producing countries in the Arab World will be ready to come into play.

Western Europe, of course, will not be the only prospective market for LNG in the long-term. The other principal possibilities lie in Japan, where a phenomenal rate of expansion of energy requirements may be confidently predicted.

LPG Exports

More immediately there may be scope for further increasing the Arab oil countries's exports of LPG (liquified petroleum gases), which are generally present in significant quantities in oilwell gas.

Long - distance ocean transport of LPG in bigger tankers, like that of LNG (liquified natural gas) is made practicable by the use of insulated tankers. The degree of refrigeration required to liquify the gases is, however, far less and the specialised tankers therefore are less costly to build. The potential markets for LPG are not so few and far between as those for LNG.

On the debit side the distance factor is again important. LPG from the oilfields must compete both with other energy products which are less costly to transport, store and handle, and also with LPG from local refineries in the marketing areas. Largely due to this it has not so far been thought attractive to market Arabian Gulf LPG's in Western Europe, despite the continuing rapid growth of LPG demand in European countries.

A substantial trade has, however, been built up between the Gulf and Japan. In 1965 when this trade emerged a total of 7.3 million barrels (2.7 million from Kuwait + 4.6 million from Saudi Arabia) were exported.

One issue of particular interest is the location of nationally-owned refineries. The international oil companies have concentrated most of their refinery construction in recent years in the oil importing countries. They have done this for a variety of reasons; but one major reason is the cheapness of bulk crude transport in very large tankers to a single point of import compared with the higher costs of moving refined products in smaller loads to more numerous import terminals. If the national oil companies wish to participate in the socalled «downstream» phases of oil supply, they too are likely to find it desirable to build refineries in the oil importing countries.

The Kuwait National Petroleum Company seems to have initiated steps in this direction. In 1967 they completed the construction of reservoirs for refined products in Copenhagen, Denmark.

ORGANISATION OF ARAB PETROLEUM EXPORTING COUNTRIES

In the field of Arab oil cooperation, an important agreement was concluded on 9th January 1968 in Beirut providing for the creation of the "Organisation of Arab Petroleum Exporting Countries".

Signed initially by Libya, Saudi Arabia and Kuwait, the agreement is open to other Arab countries producing a large proportion of Arab oil and which depend primarily on oil revenues as a source of income, in a bid to further cooperation and the coordination of oil policies of member states. Its objectives are, therefore, complementary to those of the Organisation of Petroleum Exporting Countries, established in Vienna, (OPEC) and not inconsistent as had been feared.

The relationship between the objectives of the two Organisations was stressed when the acting Secretary General of the Organisation of Arab Petroleum Exporting Countries stated that while OPEC's activities are directed primarily towards price stabilisation, those of the new Arab Organisation are geared towards achieving the principle of partnership in all stages of the oil industry so as to enable member countries to embrace the oil sector within the framework of the national economy instead of being an external factor as it is at the present moment.

The Organisation will endeavour to achieve this objective despite the fact that the major oil companies operating in the area do not support this policy.

Membership in 1980

In 1980 membership of OAPEC included Kuwait, Saudi Arabia, Libya, Algeria, Qatar, Bahrian, the United Arab Emirates, Iraq, Syria, Egypt.

Text of the OAPEC Agreement

A. The Organisation, its Objectives and Powers.

Art. 1 — a) There shall be established in accordance with the agreement an organisation called "The Organisation of Arab Petroleum Exporting Countries", hereinafter referred to as "the Organisation".

b) The Organisation shall be domiciled in the City of Kuwait in the State of Kuwait.

Art. 2 — The main objective of the Organisation is the cooperation of its members in various forms of economic activity in the petroleum industry, the realization of the closest ties among them in this field, the determination of ways and means of safeguarding the legitimate interests of its members in this industry, individually and collectively, the unification of efforts to ensure the flow of petroleum to its consumption markets on equitable and reasonable terms and the creation of suitable climate for the capital and expertise invested in the petroleum industry of the member countries.

In pursuit of these objectives, the Organisation shall in particular:

a) Take adequate measures for the harmonisation of the legal systems in force in the member countries to the extent necessary to enable the Organisation to carry out its activity.

c) Assist members to exchange information and expertise and provide training and employment opportunities for citizens of member countries in members' countries where such possibilities exist.

d) Promote cooperation among members in working out solutions to problems facing them in the petroleum industry.

e) Utilise the member resources and common potentialities in establishing joint projects in various phases of petroleum industry such as may be undertaken by all the members or those of them that may be interested in such projects.

Art. 3 — The provision of this Agreement shall not be deemed to affect those of the agreement of the Organisation of Petroleum Exporting Countries (OPEC), and especially in so far as the rights and obligations of OPEC members in respect of that organisation are concerned.

The parties to this Agreement shall be bound by the ratified resolutions of OPEC, and shall abide by them even if they are not members of OPEC.

Art. 4 — a) The Organisation shall enjoy a juridical personality and the legal capacity entitling it to exercice in the territory of each and every member all the powers of juridical persons.

In particular the Organisation may acquire and own moveable and immoveable property, perform legal transactions, as well as sue and be sued in its own name.

b) The Organisation shall enjoy in the territories of its members such immunities and privileges as are necessary for the fulfilment of its objectives and the performance of its activities, and the premises it occupies shall enjoy immunity. All such shall be defined in detail in a protocol to be appended to this Agreement.

Art. 5 — The Organisation may conclude agreements with members, or with other countries, or with a federation of states or with an international organisation, and especially agreements for establishing joint projects in various phases of economic activity in the petroleum industry.

Art. 6 — a) The contractual liability of the Organisation shall be governed by the law of the contract entered into. Liability for tort shall be governed by the common general principles of law of the members.

b) The rights and duties of the Organisation's personnel shall be subject to the provisions of this Agreement and to the statutes, regulations and decisions issued in accordance with it.

B. Membership of the Organisation.

Art. 7 — a) The founding members of the Organisation are the signatories to this Agreement.

b) Any Arab country may join the Organisation as a member providing the following conditions are met:

(1) Petroleum should constitute the principal and basic source of its national income,

(2) It should adhere to the provisions of this Agreement and amendments which may be made to it,

(3) The Council referred to in article (8) below should approve its application for membership by a majority of three - quarters of the votes provided all the votes of the founding members are approved.

C. Organs of the Organisation.

Art. 8 — The Organisation shall carry out its functions and responsibilities through the following organs:

1 — A Council of Ministers, hereinafter referred to as "The Council".

2 — An Executive Bureau, hereinafter referred to as "The Bureau".

3 — A Secretariat General, hereinafter referred to as "The Secretariat".

4 — A judicial Board, hereinafter referred to as "The Board".

The Council

Art. 9 — The Council shall be composed of one representative from each member country, who shall be the minister of Petroleum or someone else enjoying a comparable degree of responsibility for petroleum affairs.

The representative may be accompanied by a number of assistants at meetings of the Council.

Art. 10 — The Council is the supreme authority of the Organisation responsible for drawing up its general policy, directing its activity and laying down the rules governing it.

Without prejudice to the generality of the foregoing paragraph of this article the Council shall be concerned with the following:

a) Deciding on applications for membership of the Organisation and approving invitations to petroleum exporting countries to attend its meetings.

b) Taking resolutions, making recommendations, and giving advice with regard to the general policy of the Organisation, or its attitude or the attitude of a particular member or members vis-a-vis a particular situation or issue or particular situations or issues.

c) Choosing negotiators and appointing committees to negotiate on behalf of the Organisation.

d) Approving draft agreements reached by the Organisation.

e) Issuing the necessary regulations and amendments thereto.

f) Approving the Organisation's draft annual budget, and ratifying the end-of-year accounts.

g) Appointing the Secretary General and Assistant Secretaries.

h) Supervising and directing the work of the Bureau and the Secretariat.

i) Matters which this Agreement or the regulations did not expressly provide for to be within the competence of any other organ.

Art. 11 — Voting in the Council shall be subject to the following provisions:

a) Each member of the Organisation shall have one vote.

b) In order to constitute a quorum for the meetings of the Council, three - quarters of the total members must be present provided there shall be included among them two founding members.

c) Statutes shall be issued by the Council, and resolutions on substantive matters shall require a majority of three - quarters of the total votes of the members, including those of at least two founding members.

d) The Council shall determine, by a simple majority vote of all the members which matters shall be considered substantive and which procedural.

Art. 12 — a) Statutes shall be generally applicable and binding upon all the members.

b) Resolutions shall have binding authority on those whom such resolutions concern.

c) Neither the recommendations nor the advice of the Council shall be of a binding nature.

d) Without contravening the provisions of article (23) of this Agreement, a resolution which is binding on any one member shall provide for the solidarity of all the other members with the member concerned and shall, upon the request of such member, be accompanied by guarantees from the Organisation for protection against any damage to which such member shall be exposed and, should the occasion arise, for the sharing by all the members of the burden of such damage.

e) Statutes or resolutions of a binding nature which are issued by the Council shall be subject to ratification by the competent authorities in the member countries according to the legal rules in force.

Art. 13 — a) The Council shall convene at the Headquarters of the Organisation and may also be convened in the territory of any member or of any other country if it deems it necessary.

b) The Council shall convene at least twice a year, extraordinary sessions may be convened at the request of one of the members or the Secretary - General.

c) Representatives of the member countries shall assume the chairmanship of the Council by rotation according to the alphabetical order of the countries they represent, each for a period of one yar.

The Bureau

Art. 14 — The Bureau shall be composed of one representative from each of the member countries, such representative to be appointed by the country concerned. The representatives shall assume chairmanship of the Bureau by rotation according to the alphabetical order of the member countries each for a period of one year.

Art. 15 — The Bureau shall have the following competences:

a) Consider matters relating to the application of this Agreement and the Organisation's performance of its activities and functions.

b) Submitting such recommendations and proposals as it deems fit to the Council concerning matters falling within the scope of this Agreement.

c) Approve the staff regulations of the Secretariat and introduce appropriate amendments thereto after consultation with the Secretary-General.

d) Review the Organisation's draft annual budget and refer it to the Council together with the Secretary - General's observations.

e) Draw up agendas for the Council.

f) Such functions and tasks as may be assigned to it by the Council.

Art. 16 — a) The Bureau shall convene at the invitation of its chairman before every Council meeting in time to allow it to prepare the Council agenda.

b) The Bureau may hold two meetings at other times at the invitation of its chairman, upon the request of one of the members or the Secretary-General.

c) The Bureau shall convene at the Headquarters of the Organisation, and may also be convened in the territory of any member country or any other country if it deems it convenient.

d) Resolutions of the Bureau shall be carried by a majority of two-thirds of the votes of all the members in accordance with the provisions of paragraph (a) of article (11) of this Agreement.

The Secretariat

Art. 17 — a) The Secretariat shall be composed of the departments and committees laid down by the statutes and shall assume the planning, administrative and executive aspects of the Organisation's activity in accordance with the statutes and directives of the Council.

b) The seat of the Secretariat shall be the Headquarters of the Organisation.

Art. 18 — a) The Administration of the Secretariat shall be assumed by a Secretary-General aided by Assistant Secretaries who shall number no more than three unless the Council approves an increase in this number.

b) The Secretary-General and the Assistant Secretaries shall be nationals of the member countries, with adequate experience in petroleum affairs, and not more than two of them shall be selected from the same nationality.

c) The Secretary-General shall be appointed by decision of the Council for a period of three years extendable for a further period or periods.

The Assistant Secretaries shall be appointed by decisions of the Council for a period of four years extendable for a further period or periods.

d) The Secretary-General shall be the official spokesman for the Organisation. He shall be its legal representative within the limits of the powers vested in him by this Agreement, the statutes, resolutions and directives which may be issued in accordance with it. The Secretary-General shall be responsible before the Council for carrying out the tasks and duties of his office.

Art. 19 — The Secretary-General shall be charged with administering and directing the secretariat, effectively supervising all aspects of its activities and carrying out the tasks assigned to him by the Council.

The departments and committees of the secretariat shall carry out their tasks in accordance with the instructions and directives within the limits of the powers vested in them.

The Secretary-General shall carry out the duties of secretary to the Council and the Bureau whenever either of them is meeting. He may delegate one of his Assistant Secretaries to act as Secretary for the Bureau.

Art. 20 — The Secretary-General, Assistant Secretaries and all the personnel of the secretariat shall carry out their duties in full independence and in the common interest of the Organisation's member countries, and they are not permitted in the performance of their duties to seek or accept instructions from any governmental or non-governmental body. They are required to refrain from any activity inconsistent with their duties and, before assuming their posts, to swear to accept the obligations of their office and not to disclose its secrets during or after their service except in cases when the Organisation gives its permission. The members of th Organisation must respect the neutrality of the Secretary-General, the Assistant Secretaries and all the Secretariat's personnel and all the Secretariat's personnel and refrain from trying to influence any of them in any manner whatsoever.

The Secretary-General and the Assistant Secretaries shall enjoy in the territory of the Organisation's members all diplomatic immunities and privileges, while the remaining personnel of the Organisation shall enjoy the immunities and privileges necessary to the performance of their tasks and functions in freedom and independence.

The Council shall fix the salaries, allowances and grants to be paid to the Secretary-General and the Assistant Secretaries and likewise the administrative and financial bases on which they are treated.

The Judicial Board

Art. 21 — A Judicial Board shall be attached to the Organisation, the manner of whose formation and the bases of whose organisation shall be agreed upon by the signatories to this Agreement in a special protocol attached to the Agreement. Hereinafter, it shall be referred to as the Board.

Art. 22 — The judges of the Board shall be chosen from persons whose impartiality is not in doubt and who fulfill the necessary conditions for holding the highest judicial positions in their countries, or are jurists of international repute. The Council shall appoint the judges in accordance with the conditions and procedures laid down in the protocol of the Board.

The Judges shall take an oath of impartiality, integrity and respect for the protocol of the Board before the Council.

Art. 23 — The Board shall be competent to consider the following disputes:

I — Disputes relating to the interpretation and application of this Agreement and the implementation of the obligations arising from it.

Disputes which arise between two or more members of the Organisation in the field of petroleum operations.

Disputes which the Council decides that the Board is competent to consider.

Subject to the approval of the parties to the dispute, the following disputes may be referred to the Board for decision:

II — Disputes arising between any member and a petroleum company operating in the territory of the said member.

Disputes arising between any member and a petroleum company belonging to any other member.

Disputes arising between two or more members of the Organisation, other than what is provided for in paragraph (1) of this article.

Art. 24 — The judgments of the Board shall be considered final, binding and resjudicata on the parties to the dispute and shall be enforceable per se in the territories of the members.

The party concerned shall present the judgment to the local authority responsible for execution, and the competent local authorities shall, after verifying that the forwarded document is official, execute the judgment.

Art. 25 — The judges of the Board shall enjoy all diplomatic immunities and privileges in the territories of the Organisation's members.

Budget of the Organisation

Art. 26 — The Secretary-General shall draw up the draft of the Organisation's annual budget and submit it to the Council via the Bureau not later than the end of September of the year preceding the implementation of the budget. If the Council has not approved the budget by the beginning of the financial year, the budget of the previous year shall be effective on a monthly basis until the Council approves the new budget.

Art. 27 — The members of the Organisation shall contribute to the budget of the Organisation in equal shares.

General Provisions

Art. 28 — The members of the Organisation shall cooperate closely with its organs, coordinate their petroleum policies to the extent necessary to achieve its aims, take all necessary measures to assist the Organisation in performing its tasks and to meet their obligations arising out of this Agreement, and refrain from any action which might impede the execution of the Organisation's affairs and projects.

Art. 29 — The members' policies relating to petroleum affairs shall be considered to have a mutual importance, and on this basis, the members undertake to consult among themselves and within the framework of the Organisattion so as to coordinate their attitude and such measures as they may take in respect of current situations and circumstances in the petroleum industry.

Art. 30 — If one of the members is faced with a sudden and serious emergency, the member concerned is entitled to take the necessary precautionary measures, taking all possible care that such measures do not exceed the minimum required to confront the difficulties that have arisen and do not affect the continued functioning of the Organisation's activities.

The member concerned shall immediately inform the Council of the precautionary measures which he has taken, and should the situation require, the Council shall be convened to an extraordinary session to consider the matter.

Art. 31 — The organs of the Organisation shall endeavour not to do harm to the internal stability of the Organisation's members and shall refrain from any action liable to disturb their foreign relations.

Art. 32 — This Agreement does not oblige any member to disclose information whose disclosure would threaten its own essential security interests.

The members undertake to confine the withholding of information under the preceding paragraph within the narrowest possible limits.

Art. 33 — In application of the provisions of this Agreement, a year shall mean the solar year running from 1 January to 31 December inclusive.

Art. 34 — The Organisation shall, by way of the Secretariat, enter into appropriate contacts with the organs of the United Nations and its specialised agencies, as well as with other organisations.

Art. 35 — The protocols which the parties to this Agreement add to this Agreement shall be considered as integral part of it.

Art. 36 — This Agreement shall remain in effect for an indefinite period and the amendments of its provisions may be considered every ten years or upon the request of half the members. Such amendment shall require a decision of the Council carried by a majority of three quarters of the votes of all the members.

OAPEC five-year plan

Heralding a new stage of joint Arab effort in the oil sector, the Organisation of Arab Petroleum Exporting Countries has laid down a working plan which spells out guidelines for its main course of activity over the five years (1978-1982). The plan envisages : 1) the establishment of such joint projects as lube oil, carbon black, detergents and synthetic rubber, which require both economies of scale and an integrated Arab market; 2) the achievement of full cooperation and coordination among the national projects through the exchange of information, documentation, organisation of specialised seminars, the utilisation of common expertise for solving problems in the oil industry, as well as the intensification of cooperation in training and manpower development, and 3) the establishment of joint activities for the benefit of the member countries in the fields of information, international relations, energy research, optimal utilisation of hydrocarbons, and exploration studies. Solid grounds are laid in the plan for ensuring the success of joint activities in the refining and petrochemical industries.

In taking this step, OAPEC proceeds from its awareness of the need for enhancing the ability of joint Arab effort to realise the common aims of the member countries. This comes at a critical junction in the development of the Arab oil industry in which the producing countries shoulder alone most of the burden for the development of their natural resources in an industry that is highly capital - intensive and subject to nerver-ceasing technological change. The gravity of the shortage of technical expertise hence emerges in full force. The urgent need for common and integrated effort among the member countries is all the more emphasised by the industrial countries' monopoly of technology and know-how and their power of imposing prejudicial terms on any country applying to them singly in this regard.

Another important need for formulating the working plan lies in the dependence of investment largely on the availability of markets, especially in the downstream industry, warranting more cooperation and integration among projects in the member countries.

Finally,the nature of international relations at present, calls for collective and concerted efforts by the producers for facing the challenges in a world of political and economic groupings.

Projects

OAPEC founding agreement has provided that its main objective is to take such measures as may be deemed necessary to achieve closer cooperation among its member states. Within this perspective four main joint Arab projects have been established:

1 — Arab Petroleum Investment Corporation (APIC).

The incorporation of APIC was announced on November 23, 1975. Its authorised capital of 3,600 million Saudi Riyals will be used to finance petroleum projects and industries and fields of activity which are related, ancillary or complementary to such projects and industries, priority being given to joint Arab ventures. Since its inception APIC has helped in co-financing several projects, providing US $ 20 million loan for the building of the SUMED Pipeline which now serves to link Suez city, on the Red Sea, to the Mediterranean, a bond issue of 1 million Kuwaiti Dinars to Turkiye Petrolleri A.O. for the construction of the Kirkuk/ Alexandretta pipeline, and US $ 5 million securities issue to the Banque Nationale d'Algérie.

2 — Arab Petroleum Services Company (APSC)- Incorporated in November 1975 with an authorised capital of 100 million Libyan Dinars, the company has plans for the setting up of a number of subsidiaries specialised in the various branches of petroleum services, including the supply of trained manpower.

3 — Arab Maritime Petroleum Transport Company (AMPTC).

AMPTC now operates a fleet of five tankers totalling 994,000 dwt. Three more tankers were pressed into service in 1977, bringing deadweight tonnage to about 2,1 million. Two gas carriers, of 75,000 cu.m. capacity each, were delivered early in 1979.

4 — Arab Shipbuilding and Repair Yard Company (ASRY).

With an authorised capital ofUS $ 311 million, ASRY started operations in Bahrain in 1974, with the declared object of training and qualifying member states in shipbuilding, repair and maintenance. Its drydock, completed in 1977 and built on a man-made island, is fully equipped with the most sophisticated mechanical installations to cope with the needs of supertankers.

At present three major projects are on the drawing board. They include:

a) Establishment of an Arab Energy Centre.

b) Construction of a Drydock on the Mediterranean.

c) Creation of an Arab Training Institute.

5- THE SUEZ CANAL

THE SUEZ CANAL

The Suez Canal is a one way Canal. The northbound convoy and southbound convoys meet at Ballah derivation and at the Bitter Lakes.

The Suez Canal offers the shortest navigable route between the Eastern and Western hemispheres. The distance saved varies according to the route followed by the vessels. Thus a ship sailing from the Persian Gulf and making for a North American Atlantic port would have to travel 12,000 miles by the route around the Cape of Good Hope against 8,500 miles via the Suez Canal, whereas for a ship going from the Persian Gulf to a Mediterranean port these figures are 10,700 miles against 4,500 miles.

The Suez Canal was nationalized on July 26, 1956, when the operation, maintenance and improvement of this vital waterway became the responsibility of the Suez Canal Authority, an Arab organization formed specially for this purpose.

A vast programme was then prepared for the improvement of the Canal, based on extensive studies and scientific researches covering actual and future necessities of world navigation and shipbuilding.

The improvement projects executed after the nationalization have resulted in the following.

1. - Increase of the wet cross-section from 1,200m² to 1,850m². This increase of 650 m² is equivalent to double the section of the original canal inaugurated 100 years ago.

2. - Increase of the permissible draught from 36 to 37 feet and lately to 38 feet.

3. - Increase of the number of ships transiting the Canal.

Response to new shipping patterns

Since its reopening in 1975, following an eight-year closure due to the 1967 and 1973 Arab-Israeli wars, the Suez Canal Authority has devoted all its efforts first to re-establishing international confidence in the waterway and second to responding to the changes that had taken place in the patterns of world trade during that period.

The initial part of that response was more visible by the end of 1980 when the US$ 2 billion expansion programme was completed.

The chairman of the Suez Canal Authority, Engineer Mashhour Ahmed Mashhour, who also carries the rank of Deputy Prime Minister, is determined to win back and expand the proportion of oil tankers which in the past used the waterway. In 1966, for example, the oil trade accounted for some 180 million tonnes of shipping using the canal as against 70 million tonnes in non-oil cargoes. In 1979 the situation was almost exactly reversed with dry cargoes against an oil trade of 80 million tonnes.

The reasons, of course, stem from the eight-year closure of the canal. Shippers and shipbuilders had to revert to the Cape route and with that came the evolution of the supertankers, a new generation of vessels with which the Suez Canal was unable to cope.

Until the end of 1980 the largest vessel able to use the canal fully loaded was limited to 60,000 dwt, but during the first six months of 1981 that capacity was gradually increased to vessels of 150,000 dwt fully loaded, ships of 200,000 dwt partially loaded and tankers of up to 370,000 dwt in ballast.

This has been made possible by the international development programme that has increased the draught of the canal from 38ft to 53 ft and has virtually doubled the wet cross-section to 3,600 square metres.

Apart from the widening and deepening work, involving also the smoothing of some of the curves in the waterway, there are now three by-passes in operation that allow an icrease in the daily number of vessels using the canal from an average of 60-65 to closer to 90.

Besides, a new management system has been introduced. Today, the position of each ship is individually monitored through a complex system of radars, radios and nine mini computers, enabling the control centre in Ismailia to be immediately aware of any difficulties.

Specific and world benefits- In addition to specific benefits to Egypt from increased canal revenues (projected to reach one and a half billion US dollars annually), and the generation of other economic advantages, the Canal development programme is expected to have a significant international impact. World shipping will benefit from the shorter routes, and consignors and recipients may benefit from reduced freight rates. The shortening of some major trade routes will allow for more productive use of capital invested in shipping, a reduction in operating costs and in the energy use for oil shipping. Considerable savings in the number of days' sailing for the oil trade is expected to result, especially on journeys to the Mediterranean, Northwest Europe, and North America.

6- DEVELOPMENT OF ARAB BANKS AND FUTURE PROSPECTS

EXTENT OF THEIR PRESENT OPERATIONS

Since the second major oil price increase of 1979-80, concern has been expressed as to whether funds from the surplus oil exporting countries can be recycled smoothly and efficiently to those countries that are running persistent deficits. Fears that international banks would be unable, because of binding capital constraints and fully extended country limits, to undertake the intermediary role have, in the event, proved unfounded. One reason is that a new group of banks, the Arab banks, has become increasingly active in the international capital markets in the past two years. This article surveys the origins and development of the Arab banks, discusses the nature and location of their banking business, and concludes with an examination of their current and prospective operations.

ORIGINS AND DEVELOPMENT

Arab banking has developed in four distinct stages. The first stage includes the colonial period and the period up to the early 1960s when small local banks were established. These banks were chiefly concerned with domestic business and coexisted alongside the traditional money changers. Trade transactions during this period were financed mostly by branches of foreign banks in the Middle East. Indigenous Banks such as the National Commercial Bank of Saudi Arabia, the Rafidain Bank of Iraq, and the Arab Bank of Jordan, which later grew into sizable domestic banks, were established during this period.

The second stage, covering the 1960s and the early 1970s, was one of great significance. This period was characterized by the emergence of the Arab countries as major participants in world trade and finance seeking to develop their economies and to make fuller use of their resources. The need for banking development was complementary to the other aspects of the development process. In a number of countries, especially the major oil producing countries, national commercial banks were set up, some with large-scale branch banking networks. The National Bank of Kuwait, the National Commercial Bank of Libya, The Qatar National Bank, the Bank of Oman, and the National Bank of Dubai are examples of banks established during this stage. It was in this period that Kuwait and Beirut, Lebanon emerged as the more developed banking centers in the Arab region. In the poorer Arab countries, on the other hand, the environment remained unconducive to the development of a banking system.

The third stage, which lasted from about the time of the first major oil price rise in 1973-74 to the onset of the second in 1979, witnessed a rapid growth of Arab institutions and the setting up of new national money and capital markets. International banking markets evolved in Bahrain and the United Arab Emirates, while Kuwait opened up its capital market for the issuance of foreign bonds denominated in Kuwaiti dinars. Furthermore, a new group of Arab Banks flourished by setting up joint ventures with Western banks. A number of these joint ventures, which enabled Western banking know-how to be combined with the plentiful supply of capital available to the oil producing Arab countries, registered strong growth during this period. Examples of the new joint-venture banks are the Union de Banques Arabes et Françaises and the Banque Arabe et Internationale d'Investissement, both based in Paris and both jointly Arab and French owned; The European Arab Bank in Brussels and the Arab Latin American Bank operating out of Peru, both owned by consortia of Arab Banks and, respectively, European and Latin American Banks, and the Saudi International Bank, based in London, which is half owned by the Saudi Arabian monetary Agency and half by a group of International banks.

The fouth stage of development — from the second oil price rise of 1979-80 to the present time — was one in which the Arab oil producing countries again accumulated substantial oil revenues. During this period, however, there was a change in attitude on the part of the Arab oil producers toward both the placement of their surplus funds and the development of Arab banking institutions. The enlarged surpluses of investable funds quickened the process of portfolio diversification across countries, and types of assets. As part of this process, the banking industry itself was seen as a profitable business for investing capital.

This change in attitude has resulted in increased investment in banks, particularly in wholly Arab-owned banks. For instance, in 1980 the capital base of the Bahrain-based Gulf International Bank, which is owned by seven Arab governments, was increased by $ 160 million to $ 265 million. In January 1980 a new-bank, the Arab Banking Corporation, jointly owned by Kuwait, Libya, and Abu Dhabi, was set up in Bahrain with an authorized capital of £ 1 billion.

Another manifestation of the change in attitude is reflected in the development of the Islamic banking concept. The first Islamic Commercial Bank was set up in Egypt during the 1960s, and others have recently been established in the Middle East and abroad. These banks are run according to Islamic principles. As payment of interest (riba) is forbidden in Islam, the Islam banks base their business on an alternative form of compensation for depositors. The concept of profit is, by contrast, acceptable, and so these institutions operate along the lines of a mutual fund — that is, the depositor gains the right to a share in the profits of the institution. The most significant recent development in this context has been the establishment in Geneva of a highly capitalized ($ 1 billion authorized capital) Islamic bank — Dar-al-Maal al Islamic — which will undertake international banking operations.

CENTRES OF INTERNATIONAL ARAB BANKING

The three main centers of Arab banking are the Middle East, Paris, and London. There is, however, much evidence to suggest that both the older and the newly established banks are actively seeking to expand into other banking centers. Singapore and New York are but two current examples.

International banking activity in the Middle East has been centered in Bahrain and Kuwait. Bahrain developed as an international financial center through the establishment of offshore banking units. Its growth since the mid-1970s, however, has been slower than expected, although some banks (notably the Gulf International Bank and the Arab Banking Corporation) are now using Bahrain as a base for a strong expansion into international lending. Japanese banks are also opening offshore banking units in Bahrain and seem destined to become a significant banking force in the area. Statistical evidence suggests that offshore banking units have recently grown strongly; in the 12 month ended September 1981, for instance, the total assets and liabilities of offshore banking units grew by 38 per cent and at the end of the period amounted to $ 46.4 billion.

Kuwait established an open capital market in the 1970s. At its peak this market was host to some 15 bond issues denominated in Kuwaiti dinars, worth the equivalent of $ 440 million. The absence of foreign exchange controls and the existence of ceilings on domestic interest rates, however, made it difficult for the Kuwaiti authorities to maintain the liquidity of the market at times when international interest rates were rising. The result has been the closure of the market from time to time. Kuwaiti institutions, in particular the Arab Company for Trading Securities, have played a leading role in attracting borrowers and maintaining a secondary market. Three other Kuwaiti institutions have also been active in the wider international bond market: the Kuwait Investment Company, the Kuwait Foreign Trading, Contracting and Investment Company, and the Kuwait International Investment Company.

In Paris there are 35 wholly or partly Arab-owned banks, the large number reflecting the long-standing French-Arab connection, which was cemented further during the late 1960s. Many of the important new banks were set up in Paris late in the second and third stage of Arab banking development. The French authorities are at present limiting access of the smaller Arab banks by requiring that they include a French minority partner. It remains to be seen whether speculation concerning the bank nationalization policies of President Mitterand will act as a constraint on the further development of Arab banking businees in Paris.

In London, some 29 Arab banks and investment institutions now have offices — about half of which have been set up in the last two and a half years. These institutions were established primarily because of the attractions that London has a financial center — a gull range of financial services, good communications, and its position as the main center for Eurocurrency activity. These institutions have been involved in trade-related financing, syndicated Euro currency lending, and some investment business. Recently, London became the home for the Arab Bankers Association — an international association of bankers set up to foster interest in Arab banking affairs, publish research studies, and organize training courses for Arab bankers.

SIZE OF ARAB BANKS

There are a large number of Arab banks, but many of them are less than ten years old and all of them are small in size compared with western banks. Of the 50 largest Arab banks listed in the table annexed, over half of them have been established since 1970. Only 17 Arab banks are included in the list compiled by "The BANKER" (June 1981) of the 500 largest banks by size of assets. By way of comparison, Citicorp, the world's largest banking corporation, has assets of some $110 billion, a total greater than the sum of the assets of the largest 20 Arab banks.

The largest Arab banks are those that were set up in the first stage of Arab banking development; banks from Saudi Arabia, Kuwait, and Algeria are among the largest 20. The banks established in the fourth stage of development have accomplished the fastest rates of growth in assets, however. To cite two examples, the Gulf International Bank has doubled in size in a year (with assets now of over $ 2.9 billion), while the newly created Arab Banking Corporation, which showed assets of $ 1.9 billion in its interim 1980 financial statement, probably now has assets exceeding $ 3 billion. The Arab Latin American Bank and the Saudi International Bank have expanded their business rapidly, while many of the other banks established during the third and fourth stages, although expanding less rapidly have still grown at rates that western banks might envy. It is clear that many of these newer Arab banks will move quickly up the list of bank size by assets.

GROWTH OF ARAB BANKING BUSINESS

The process of external intermediation of banking business that occurred among the banks of North America, Europe, and Japan in the 1970s is clearly taking place in the Arab banking world now.

In the first and second stages of Arab banking, activity was almost entirely confined to the domestic market. In these periods, banking services were extended in regions which were, by Western standards, underbanked. Building on their stronger domestic bases, several of these banks — the Rafidain Bank, the National Commercial Bank, and the Arab Bank, for instance — are now playing a growing role in international markets.

The newer banks, founded late in the third stage and in the fourth stage, were oriented toward international business from the outset. Trade financing was one area of growth, but several banks have become established names in the foreign and international bond markets. The newest banks — the Arab Banking Corporation, the Gulf International Bank, and the Saudi International Bank — are quickly establishing themselves in the highly visible syndicated Eurocurrency lending market, an area of banking activity that does not require a well-established and highly sophisticated banking structure.

The extent to which the Arab Banks are active in the international banking markets can be seen, in part, by the data for participation in syndicated Eurocurrency loans. In the previous table "PUBLICIZED SYNDICATED EUROCURRENCY CREDITS", Arab-led syndications comprise loans in which one or more Arab banks (including consortium banks) acted as a lead or a co-lead manager.

The volume of loans organized by Arab-led syndicates, which increased gradually during 1978-80 — despite some decline in total market activity in 1980 — showed substantial growth in 1981. In that year about 26.5 per cent of the volume of syndicated lending was arranged by Arab-led syndicates. Arab-led syndicates channeled their lending in roughly equal proportions to the industrial and the oil importing developing countries. If, however, attention were focused on the make up of the entire management group of syndicated loans and not solely on the lead managers, the degree of Arab bank participation in the management groups of loans for the oil importing developing countries would be somewhat greater than for loans to the industrial countries. Recently, several Arab syndicated loans have taken the form of all-Arab participation, that is, they have been confined to small groups of Arab banks.

It should be stressed that syndicated lending is only one part of total international lending. As a share of total international lending, Arab banks would account for a much smaller proportion of the total, as up to now they generally have not diversified into the full range of international banking activities.

FUTURE PROSPECTS

The recent growth of Arab banks has been quite remarkable. The combined capital of the 25 most active Arab banks in the Euromarkets, which amounted to £ 2.4 billion at the end of 1979 and supported assets worth $ 51 billion, may well have doubled by the end of 1981.

A number of factors will influence the growth of Arab banks in the future, including capitalization and managerial capacity. Since many of these banks are already highly capitalized, the availability of capital is unlikely to be a constraint in the short term. However, a shortage of skilled banking personnel, particularly staff of Arab origin, might limit the pace and nature of the expansion.

Most Arab banks have not been direct recipients of large bolumes of funds from the Organization of Petroleum Exporting Countries. Hitherto, the Arab banks have generally sought funding from a range of primary depositors and have also tapped the inter-bank money markets. As confidence grows in Arab institutions, Arab depositors may be well begin to place a higher proportion of their funds with them.

To summarize, banks established in the fourth stage appear to be set for a period of sound growth, while many of the larger banks established in the first and second stages will also continue to increase their operations in international markets. For some of the consortia of Arab and Western banks created in the third stage, the next few years may be a period of change and consolidation. Some, like the Banque Franco-Arabe d'Investissements Internationaux (FRAB bank) (in which non-Arab investors recently sold their interests), may be bought out entirely by Arab investors and adopt a more expansive stance. Others, mindful that they do not have the capacity for large-scale lending, may seek steadier growth by diversifying into a wider range of banking functions.

7- THE PALESTINIAN PROBLEM

At the turn of the century, there were only about 500,000 people living in Palestine; most were Arab peasants, but 25,000 were Jews, who owned less than 1% of the land. In 1917 the British, in an effort to gain Jewish support during World War I, issued the Balfour Declartion. That document, prepared by Foreign Secretary Arthur Balfour, endorsed the Zionist dream of establishing a Jewish homeland in Palestine, though it contended that such a homeland should not "prejudice" the rights of its Arab inhabitants.

Historically, the Palestinians have lived in the same general region on the eastern shore of the Mediterranean since ancient times. They trace their ancestry to the Canaanites, though it was the Philistines from whom the name of latter-day Palestine is derived. In Arabic, the country is called Filastion. The region has been ruled by a seemingly endless procession of conquerors, including the Ottoman Turks, who held it from the 16th century until World War I. For 30 years thereafter, Britain governed Palestine, which included the present territory of Israel, Jordan, the West Bank and Gaza, under a League of Nations mandate.

On November 29th 1947, the United Nations proposed the division of the present area of Israel, the West Bank and Gaza into separate Jewish and Arab states; Jerusalem was to have a special status as an internationalized city. Most Jewish leaders in Palestine accepted the partition; the Arabs did not. Fearful of impending civil war, 300,000 Arabs living in Palestine fled their homeland in the weeks before the declaration of the state of Israel on May 15, 1948; when Arab armies attacked the new country, another 350,000 took flight or were forced to leave, abandoning homes, farms, orchards and shops.

At first these 650,000 refugees rejected all attempts to resettle them. They even refused to leave their UNWRA tents, fearing that their transfer to the concrete huts offered them would be taken and a sign that they had accepted their dispersal. Other Arabs gave minimal support to the refugees, on the ground that the West had created the problem by recognizing Israel's existence. That attitude is changing however. In 1979 Saudi Arabia contributed an estimated US $ 1,200,000 towards making up UNWRA'S ever growing deficits. Other Arab contributors in 1979 were Bahrain ($.15,000), Egypt ($.4,000), Iraq ($.122,000), Jordan ($.264,000), Kuwait ($.600,000), Lebanon ($.31,000), Libyan Arab Jamahiriya (£.4 milion), Oman ($.25,000), Qatar ($.1100,000), Syria ($.112,000), United Arab Emirates ($.270,000).

Since the Six-Day war of 1967, Israelis have bought, expropriated or taken over roughly 30% of the West Bank's 2,200 sq. mi., including some of the most fertile farm-land in the Jordan Valley.In many instances,land has been seized in the name of defence. A housing project for 20,000 Israelis (costing Us $.300 million) was under construction in 1979 on the mountain top of La'ale Adumin, thereby completing the "encirclement" of Jerusalem that successive Israeli governments have claimed as a strategic priority since the 1967 war.

One tragedy of the present conflict is that the Palestinians and Jews have rather more in common than either side is usually willing to admit. Both are Semitic peoples, with ancient roots in the Holy Land. Both have suffered the agony of exile; both place a high value on education, culture and industry. By comparison with the Israelis, however the Palestinians are still something of a mystery to the average man of the street outside the Middle East. An opinion poll taken recently disclosed that 30% of the US public think Palestinians are best described as "terrorists"; 17% regard them as "displaced persons who will eventually settle in another country", and 19% think of them as "refugees seeking a homeland".

These worn-out clichés are maliciously wrong. Of the world's 4 million Palestinians, only about 47,000 are members of either the P.L.O.'s Palestine Liberation Army (12,000) or its six semi-independent commando groups (30,000 to 35,000). At present according to the United Nations Relief and Works Agency (UNWRA), which assists in running the refugee camps, there were 1,803,564 registered Palestinian refugees in 1979; but only about 650,000 of them lived in 61 camps scattered throughout Lebanon, Syria, Jordan, the West Bank and Gaza. The great majority of the world's Palestinians still live in the Middle East, mainly in Jordan (about 1 million), the West Bank and Gaza (1.2 million), Israel (650,000) and Lebanon (450,000), but there are also sizable communities in the Gulf states, Egypt and Saudi Arabia. In Kuwait, the Palestinian constitute about 20% of the population, in Jordan, an estimated 65%.

Most are still peasant farmers or workers, but a surprising number are doctors, lawyers, bankers, poets. Throughout the Gulf, Palestinians advise royal families on financial affairs and oil dealings, run airlines and construction firms. Remittances from foreign workers, mostly Palestinians in the Gulf, add more than US $.800 million a year to Jordan's economy. The Palestinians still demonstrate an extraordinary drive for education. In 1978, in fact, according to one survey, there were 80,000 Palestinians enrolled in universities throughout the world, a remarkably high rate for an impoverished people. Surprisingly, some wealthy professionals have chosen to stay in refugee camps, both as a form of protest and as a means of preserving their national identity.

Meanwhile, the P.L.O. has been active on more than one front: military against Israel; social and diplomatic in a bid to earn the respect and recognition of the outside world, notably in Arab and Western capitals. For although it has harrassed Jewish settlements in Israel itself for more than 15 years, it has also manages to devote time and resources to a wide range of services and businesses.

It runs hospitals and clinics, dispenses social security benefits, sponsors trade unions and even association for writers, poets and painters. It maintains 35 small factories that produce clothing, blankets, furniture and toys, and a film centre.

On the diplomatic front it has opened 82 offices around the world, and appointed representatives in every Arab country except Saudi Arabia, as well as in non-Arab states, including USA, USSR, China, Cuba, Yugoslavia, Switzerland and Britain. On November 22nd, 1974 it was granted permanent observer status at the General Assembly of the UN and at international conferences sponsored by the UN. In September 1976, the P.L.O. became a full member of the League of Arab States.

As it is, it has tranformed itself, in effect, into a government in exile with a legislature (the Council), and a Cabinet (the executive committee). The 100-member Council which meets twice a year, includes Palestinians from every walk of life and is probably the most democratic institution in the Arab world.

THE PALESTINE NATIONAL CHARTER

The following are extracts from the 33-article Palestine National Charter, or "Covenant", originally adopted at the inaugural meeting of the Palestine National Council held in East Jerusalem in May-June 1964 at which the decision was taken to form the PLO, as amended by the PNC in July 1968 and reaffirmed by the 13th PNC session held in Cairo in March 1977.

Article 1

Palestine is the homeland of the Palestinian Arab people, it is an indivisible part of the Arab homeland, and the Palestinian people are an integral part of the Arab nation.

Article 2

Palestine, with the boundaries it had during the British mandate (from 1922 to 1948), is an indivisible territorial unit.

Article 3

The Palestinian Arab people possess the legal right to their homeland and have the right to determine their destiny after achieving the liberation of their country in accordance with their wishes and entirely of their own accord and will.

Article 5

The Palestinians are those Arab nationals who, until 1947, normally resided in Palestine regardless of whether they were evicted from it or have stayed there. Anyone born, after that date, of a Palestinian father -whether inside Palestine or outside it-is also a Palestinian.

Article 6

The Jews who had normally resided in Palestine until the beginning of the Zionist invasion will be considered Palestinians.

Article 8

The phase in their history, through which the Palestinian people are now living, is that of national struggle for the liberation of Palestine. Thus the conflicts among the Palestinian national forces are secondary, and should be ended for the sake of the basic conflict that exists between the forces of Zionism and of imperialism on the one hand, and the Palestinian Arab people on the other. On this basis the Palestinian masses, regardless of whether they are residing in the national homeland or in diaspora constitute-both their organizations and the individuals-one national front working for the retrieval of Palestine and its liberation through armed struggle.

Article 9

Armed struggle is the only way to liberate Palestine. Thus it is the overal strategy, not merely a tactical phase. The Palestinian Arab people assert their absolute determination and firm resolution to continue their armed struggle and to work for an armed popular revolution for the liberation of their country and their return to it. They also assert their right to normal life in Palestine and to exercise their right to self-determination and sovereignty over it.

Article 11

The Palestinians will have three mottoes: national unity, national mobilization and liberation.

Article 12

The Palestinian people believe in Arab unity. In order to contribute their share towards the attainment of that objective, however, they must, at the present stage of their struggle, safeguard their Palestinian identity and develop their consciousness of that identity, and oppose any plan that may dissolve or impair it.

Article 15

The liberation of Palestine, from an Arab viewpoint, is a national duty, and it attempts to repel the Zionist and imperialist aggression against the Arab homeland, and aims at the elimination of Zionism in Palestine.

Absolute responsibility for this falls upon the Arab nation-peoples and governments-with the Arab people of Palestine in the vanguard. Accordingly the Arab nation must mobilize all its military, human, moral and spiritual capabilities to participate actively with the Palestinian people in the liberation of Palestine. It must, particularly in the phase of the armed Palestinian revolution, offer and furnish the Palestinian people with all possible help, and material and human support, and make available to them the means and opportunities that will enable them to continue to carry out their leading role in the armed revolution,until they liberate their homeland.

Article 16

The liberation of Palestine, from a spiritual point of view, will provide the Holy Land with an atmosphere of safety and tranquility, which in turn will safeguard the country's religious sanctuaries and guarantee freedom of worship and of visit to all, without discrimination of race, colour, language, or religion. Accordingly, the people of Palestine look to all spiritual forces in the world for support.

Article 17/19

The liberation of Palestine, from a human point of view, will restore to the Palestinian individual his dignity, pride and freedom. Accordingly the Palestinian Arab people look forward to the support of all those who believe in the dignity of man and his freedom in the world.

The partition of Palestine in 1947 and the establishment of the state of Israel are entirely illegal, regardless or the passage of time, because they were contrary to the will of the Palestinian people and to their natural right in their homeland, and inconsistent with the principles embodied in the Charter of the United Nations, particularly the right to self-determination.

Article 20

The Balfour Declaration (issued by the then British Foreign Secretary in November 1917, viewing "with favour the establishment in Palestine of a National Home for the Jewish people" but including a provision that "nothing shall be done which may prejudice the civil and religious rights of existing non-Jewish communities in Palestine"), the (British) mandate for Palestine and every thing that has been based upon them, are deemed null and void. Claims of historical of religious ties of Jews with Palestine are incompatible with the facts of history and the true conception of what constitutes statehood. Judaism, being a religion, is not an independent nationality. Nor do Jews constitute a single nation with an identity of its own; they are citizens of the states to which they belong.

Article 21

The Palestinian Arab people, expressing themselves by the armed Palestinian revolution, reject all solutions which are substitutes for the total liberation of Palestine and reject all proposals aiming at the liquidation of the Palestinian problem, or its internationalization.

Article 22

Zionism is a political movement organically associated with international imperialism and antagonistic to all action for liberation and to progressive movements in the world. It is racist and fanatic in its methods. Israel is the instrument of the Zionist movement, and a geographical base for world imperialism place strategically in the midst of the Arab homeland to combat the hopes of the Arab nation for liberation, unity and progress. Israel is a constant source of threat vis-a-vis peace in the Middle East and the whole world. Since the liberation of Palestine will destroy the Zionist and imperialist presence and will contribute to the establishment of peace in the Middle East, the Palestinian people look for the support of all the progressive and peaceful forces and urge them all, irrespective of their affiliations and beliefs, to offer the Palestinian people all aid and support in their just struggle for the liberation of their homeland.

Article 23

The demands of security and peace, as well as the demands of right and justice, require all states to consider Zionism an illegitimate movement, to outlaw its existence, and to ban its operations, in order that friendly relations among peoples may be preserved, and the loyalty of citizens to their respective homelands safeguarded.

Article 26

The Palestine Liberation Organisation, representative of the Palestinian revolutionary forces, is responsible for the Palestinian Arab people's movement in its struggle-to retrieve its homeland, liberate and return to it and exercise the right of selfdetermination in it-in all military, political and financial fields and also for whatever may be required by the Palestine cause on the inter-Arab and international levels.

Article 28

The Palestinian Arab people assert the genuineness and independence of their national revolution and reject all forms of intervention, trusteeship and subordination.

Article 29

The Palestinian people possess the fundamental and genuine legal right to liberate and retrieve their homeland. The Palestinian people determine their attitude towards all states and forces on the basis of the stands they adopt vis-a-vis the Palestinian cause and the extent of the support they offer to the Palestinian revolution to fulfil the aims of the Palestinian people.

Article 33

The Charter shall not be amended save by (vote of) a majority of two-thirds of the total membership of the National Council of the Palestine Liberation Organization (taken) at a special session convened for that purpose.

8 - GULF CO-OPERATION COUNCIL

Acting upon an idea reportedly conceived at an Islamic summit conference held in Taif (Saudi Arabia) in late January 1981, the Gulf states of Bahrain, Kuwait, Oman, Qatar, Saudi Arabia and the United Arab Emirates (UAE) agreed at a meeting of their Foreign Ministers in Riyad (Saudi Arabia) on Feb. 4-5 to establish a Cooperation Council of the Arab Gulf States which would provide a framework for the co-ordination of all government policies between the member countries with a view to safeguarding security and stability in the Gulf.

Following a further meeting of the Foreign Ministers in Muscat (Oman) on March 9-10, the heads of state of the member countries of the new Cooperation Council held their first summit meeting in Abu Dhabi (UAE) on May 25-26. On the first day of their summit the rulers approved the statutes of the New Council, in accordance with which the aims of the new organization were defined as follows:

"(i) To achieve co-ordination, integration and co-operation among the member states in all fields in order to bring about their unity; (ii) to deepen and strengthen the bonds of co-operation existing among their peoples in all fields; (iii) to draw up similar systems in all fields... including economic and financial, trade, customs and transport, educational and cultural, health and social, information and tourism, and judicial and administrative; and (iv) to promote scientific and technical progress in the fields of industry, minerals, agriculture, sea wealth and animal wealth and to establish scientific research centres and collective projects and to encourage the private sector's cooperation for the good of the peoples of the member states."

The six countries stated that they had agreed to form the Council out of their "awareness of their special ties and common characteristics and the similarity of the regimes governing them on the basis of the Islamic faith", their "belief in the common destiny and aim uniting their peoples", their "desire to achieve co-ordination, integration and co-operation" which they believed would serve "the sublime objective of the Arab nation", and "a desire to continue efforts in all vital fields concerning their peoples and to achieve their aspirations for a better future and unity".

It was agreed that the Council, the headquarters of which were to be in Riyadh, would be composed of a Supreme Council, a Ministerial Council and a General Secretariat, these three bodies being able to establish auxiliary organs as required.

In an appendix to a final statement agreed by the member countries on May 26 it was stated that committees had been set up with responsibility for (i) economic and social planning; (ii) financial, economic and trade co-operation; (iii) industrial co-operation; (iv) oil; and (v) social and cultural services.

With regard to the oil committee, which would comprise the Foreign, Oil and Finance Ministers of the member countries (which together provided over a quarter of the non-communist world's oil supplies), its duties would be to "co-ordinate the policies of the Council's members in the field of oil industry in all stages of drilling, refining, marketing and pricing", as well as "transporting and exploiting natural gas and developing sources of energy". In addition, the oil committee would draw up a "unified oil policy and joint stands towards the outside world and international organizations". UAE sources indicated that one of the first projects of the Cooperation Council was likely to be the setting-up, on a Kuwaiti proposal, of a $6,000 million joint investment fund to utilize surplus oil revenues.

On June 8 the Finance Ministers met in Riyadh to draw up a collective co-operation pact aimed inter alia at abolishing all trade and customs barriers among the member countries, unifying financial and banking regulations and encouraging private capital for investment projects.

The member countries of the Co-operation Council emphasized generally that the role of the new organization would, for the most part, be restricted to economic and social issues, pointing out at the same time that such co-operation had existed for some time and that the Council had been formed merely to provide an administrative framework to put this into effect. It was, however, widely accepted that the defence and security of the Gulf and of the oil installations there had been a key factor in the establishment of the Council in view of such recent events as the Soviet intervention in Afghanistan, the Iranian Shia Moslem revolution, and the outbreak of war between Iran and Iraq in September 1980.

In particular, the Gulf countries had repeatedly expressed fears of super-power rivalry in the Gulf area, their anxieties in this respect being heightened by the desire of the United States to increase its military presence in the region to counter what it viewed as a growing Soviet encroachment in the Gulf. In this connexion the Council members-with the exception of Oman, which was co-operating militarily with the United States-had consistently expressed their opposition to the presence of foreign troops in the area, in particular to the deployment of Western forces within the framework of the US rapid deployment force (set up by President Carter in 1980), and declared their determination to provide their own security.

In their final statement the heads of state reaffirmed that "the region's security and stability are the responsibility of its peoples and countries" and that "this Council expresses the will of these countries and their right to defend their security and independence". They also recorded their "absolute rejection of any foreign interference in the region from whatever source" and called for the entire region to be kept "free of international conflicts, and particularly the presence of military fleets and foreign bases", in order to "safeguard their interests and the interests of the world".

GEOGRAPHY

Algeria occupies an area of 2,293,190 sq. km. lying, between Morocco and Tunisia, in the centre of that stretch of the North African coast which lies between Tangier and Cape Bon. Algeria lies high, having an average altitude of 3,000 feet.

From north to south, the country is divided into two natural regions; one is the Tell, and the other the Steppes of the High Plateaux. The great desert, the Sahara, extends southwards from the foot of the Saharan Atlas.

The Tell is a Mediterranean land; it has a regular annual rainfall of over 16 inches, but this is very irregularly divided between autumn and spring.

The steppes of the High Plateaux, at a greater altitude, have a more continental and a drier climate.

South of this plateau region lies the main ridge of the Atlas mountains, cutting across the country diagonally from north-east to south-west. From these mountains several rivers run to the Algerian coast, the chief of which is the Chelif, 435 miles long, and teeming with fish.

Climate

Along the coast the climate is temperate. The four summer months from June to September are generally warm and humid, the day temperature registering between 27-32 degrees C (80-90F), but rising when the hot dry «siroco» wind blows from the south for brief periods.

Further south in the Sahara desert it is hot and arid, the daytime temperature in the summer reaches 43 degrees C (110 degrees F).

Public holidays (1983)

New Year's Day (1 January); Mulid al Nabi-birthday of the Prophet (16 December); Labour Day (1 May); National Day (19 June); Independence Day (5 July); Eid Al Fiter (11-13 July); Eid al Adha, Feast of the Sacrifice (17-20 September); Revolution Day (1 November); Muslim New Year (7 October); Ashoura-martyrdom of Imam Hussein, day of mourning for Shi ite Muslims (16 October)

Language & Religion

The official language is Arabic but French is still the language of business and administration. English is gradually gaining ground among the younger generations.

The Algerians, Arabs and Berbers (totalling 13 million) are Moslems. There are also Roman Catholic, Protestant and Jewish minorities.

HISTORY

The Prehistoric period of Algeria remains a mystery. All that we learn from the discovery of stone tools is that there were men in Algeria between the tenth and fifth centuries B.C. It would appear that the Berbers of today are the product of a complicated racial mixture due to a succession of invasions and cross- breedings.

Though the pagan and Christian civilizations of Rome were at work in the Berber lands of North Africa for nearly 800 years, they have left few traces, apart from the ruins of their cities.

In the middle of the seventh century, fifteen years after the death of the Prophet of Islam, Arab horsemen appeared in the Berber lands for the first time.

A second Arab invasion, that of the Beni Hilal, who came from Upper Egypt in the middle of the eleventh century, devastated the Maghreb. This invasion, like the first, failed to turn the Berbers of present-day Algeria into Arabs by race.

At the beginning of the sixteenth century the Spaniards occupied several Algerian ports, including Mersa al-Kebir, Oran, and Bougie and besieged Algiers itself.

They were followed in 1830 by the French.

The immediate pretext for the French expedition was the celebrated blow with his fly-whisk which Dey Hussain gave the French Consul Deval, in an alter cation over the unpais debt of two Algerian Jews.

French Occupation

The French soon found the temperate and hilly coastal belt suitable for commercial agriculture, and nearly a million french and other Europeans settled in Algeria. Fourfifths of the Europeans lived in towns, but 45,000 European farmers owned a third of all arable land, through widespread confiscation especially after the unsuccessful rebellion of 1871.

From then until the end of the nineteenth century Algeria was the scene of considerable economic progress. A feature of the period was the growth of large scale agricultural and industrial enterprises, from which the Muslim population had benefited little owing to settlers opposition.

The years between World War I and 1953 were marked by a movement of independence.

In 1954, the rebel FLN (Front de Libération Nationale) launched a guerilla revolt; it was soon pinning down a French army of 450,000. The FLN was supported by the Arab states; the war embittered French relations with them, and French resentment at Egyptian actions contributed to the 1956 Suez entanglement.

In 1958 frustration over failure to suppress the rebellion produced the overthrow of the French Government by a revolt among the settlers, backed by the army in Algeria and by French supporters of the claim that Algeria was part of France.

Liberation

A referendum was held in Metropolitan France and Algeria between 6-8 January 1961 to decide on Algerian self- determination as proposed by President de Gaulle. His proposals were approved by 15,200,073 against 4,996,474 votes in Metropolitan France, and by 1,749,969 against 676,546 votes in Algeria.

A cease -fire agreement was concluded between the French Government and the representatives of the Algerian Nationalists on 18 March 1962. On 7 April a provisional executive of 7 members was set up, under the chairmanship of Abderrahman Fares, as provided by the Evian agreements which put an end to French rule in Algeria.

In May the Government abrogated some 60 mining concessions, all or most of which were believed to have been effectively abandoned by their owners since independence. This was followed in May 1966 by the nationalisation of 11 working iron, zinc, lead and copper mines, mostly owned by French companies.

Between May 1966 and May 1968, the Government took over all banking and insurance operations, as well as 41 French firms in the mechanical, fertilizer, building materials, food and chemical industries.

On February 24, 1971, the Algerian Government nationalised 51% of all the activities of the French petroleum companies. SONATRACH - the State-owned company-took over 51% of all shares, rights and interests of the oil concessions belonging to the French companies operating in Algeria, and brought up to 51% its shares in other companies owned by other foreign interests where these shares were less than 51%.

All natural gas fields, and allied installations were 100% nationalised. The State also took over completely rights to the associated gas that came out from producing oil wells. All non-Algerian interests with respect to transportation of gas of oil by pipelines were completely nationalised.

In 1973 and early 1974 the Foreign Ministers of Algeria and France were busy mending fences between the two countries caused by the nationalisation of French petroleum interests and other issues.

In April 1975, President Valery Giscard d'Estaing visited Algiers, the first visit since independence by a French President.

On the home front President Boumedienne started what was in effect a quest for internal legitimisation for his regime, following the publication by two former Presidents of the wartime government-in-exile, Ferhat Abbas and Ben Yussef Ben Khedda, accusing Boumedienne of tòtalitarian rule and personality cult.

The President's response was to issue a National Charter which set out three aims: consolidation of national independence, development of agriculture and industry, and decentralisation. The National Charter was approved by referendum (98.5%). This was followed in February 1977 by the election of a 261-member National Assembly, which would henceforth constitute the basic structure of government power.

Meanwhile, Algeria's relations with its neighbours, Morocco and Mauritania, deteriorated towards the end of the year as the case of the Spanish Sahara moved towards crisis. Algeria, while not claiming any part of the territory, actively supported self-determination for the Saharans and provided a base for the independence movement, the Frente Polisario. Its concern for the future of the territory was strongly expressed at the United Nations and in Madrid, and Algerian-Spanish commercial relations were threatened when Spain announced its intention to leave the Sahara.

Under President Boumedienne's leadership, Algeria maintained close links with the Soviet Union and other East European States. It staunchly supported Arab unity, the non-aligned movement, third world affairs, and was among the principal initiators of the declaration and programme of action on the establishment of a new international economic order for which a special session of the UN General Assembly had been convened in 1974

Death of Boumedienne

Mr. Houari Boumedienne, the President of Algeria for 13 of its 16 years of independence, died in hospital in Algiers on Dec. 27, 1978, having on the previous six weeks been in a coma brought on by a rare blood disease known as Waldenstrom's syndrome. The state funeral on Dec. 29 was attended by representatives of some 60 countries.

President Chadli

In accordance with the Constitution of 1976, the National Assembly thereupon appointed its Speaker, Mr. Rabah Bitat, as interim President, who was obliged to call presidential elections within 45 days, Elections were accordingly held on Feb.7,1979 when Col. Benjedid Chadli, was unanimously elected as the new head of state.

The domestic changes pianned by President Chadli involve for the most part ways of increasing economic efficiency, priority being given to the agricultural programme.

Continuation of "Cleaning-up" campaign

As part of the Government's efforts to dampen down social unrest, President Chadli continued the "cleaning-up" campaign which had commenced in 1979 under the direction of Col. Abdelghani. While this campaign had initially been directed against "parasitic elements" and sub-standard conditions in towns and cities, it was later expanded to purge and to "moralize" public and economic life at every level of Algerian society, Mr. Baki (the Justice Minister) emphasizing that no one was above the law. Several important figures, including politicians and heads of state enterprises, were among those accused of corruption, negligence and other irregularities.

Growing social unrest

During the first half of 1981 mounting discontent with poor social and economic conditions in Algeria gave rise to a series of strikes, demonstrations and sporadic outbreaks of violence involving in particular students and other young people. (Of Algeria's total population of some 19,000,000 an estimated 60 per cent were under the age of 21, a substantial proportion of them being unemployed). The main grievances were with continually rising prices, critical housing problems and social inequalities, such conditions providing an ideal recruiting environment for extremist groups, notably the Moslem fundamentalists.

While a number of incidents of agitation in Algerian cities in the first months of 1981 involved Moslem fundamentalists, many disturbances were connected with demands for greater recognition of the Berber language and culture.

Berber developments

With a view to achieving an accommodation between the aims of the official Arabization programme and Berber demands, the FLN in early 1981 began discussions on the adoptation of a cultural charter for Algeria. The formulation of such a charter was entrusted to Mr. Abdelhamid Mehri (a former Minister of Information and Culture), but a draft document submitted to the central committee session of June 30-July 2 met with little approval within the Berber community.

Family code

In September 1981 the Algerian Government revived the idea of the "family code" dealing in particular, with the status and rights of women and based on Islamic principles.

Under its provisions (i) a woman would be a minor throughout her life under the authority of her father, husband, brother, uncle or eldest son; (ii) polygamy would be permitted; (iii) repudiation of a wife (but not of a husband) would be legalized; (iv) a Moslem woman would be forbidden to marry a non-Moslem man (although a Moslem man might marry outside his faith); and (v) a wife's professional activity would have to be authorized by her husband.

Relations with France

Relations between Algeria and France impoved in 1981, boosted by the election of a socialist Government in France in May-June, and a series of interministerial meetings was held between July and November in preparation for the visit of President Mitterrand to Algiers which took place on Nov. 30-Dec. 1.

In a joint communiqué issued on Dec. 1, Presidents Chadli and Mitterrand expressed their rejection of all political and economic domination and their commitment to the principles of national integrity and self-determination and to working for a new international economic order in which the countries of the "South" would be able to develop and to assert their independence.

In November 1983, President Chadli visited Paris, the first visit since Independence by an Algerian President.

Gas exports

In February 1982 agreement was reached on the price to be paid for Algerian liquefied natural gas (LNG) by France.

The contract signed on Feb. 3, 1982, covered a total purchase of Algerian gas by France of 9,150 million cubic metres per year — the combined total of the contracts of 1964, 1972 and 1976.

THE CONSTITUTION

(Approved by Referendum on Nov. 19, 1976)

Section 1. "Fundamental Principles of Algeria's society".

Chapter 1 of this section laid down that the state was "Socialist"; that Islam was its religion and Arabic its national and official language; that national sovereignty was vested in the people; and that the National Charter was "the fundamental source of the nation's policies and of its laws".

In Chapter 2, it was stated that Socialism was "an irreversible option and the only way of achieving national independence", but that "private property for personal or family use" was guaranteed and that "non-exploitative private property" was "part of the new social organization".

In Chapter 3, the State was described as being "at the exclusive service of the People"; accordingly those in positions of responsibility had to live "solely on their salaries" and were not allowed "either directly or by proxy" to engage in remunerative activities.

In Chapter 4, "fundamental freedoms and human rights" were guaranteed, and "all discrimination based on prejudices concerning sex, race or occupation" was forbiden. In Articles 45-50 it was laid down that the law could not be retroactive; that all people were "considered innocent until proved guilty"; that judicial errors would entail compensation by the State; and that the inviolability of private life and of the person was guaranteed (torture thus being forbidden). The State guaranteed inter alia the secrecy of correspendence, "freedom of conscience and of opinion" (Article 54), "freedom of intellectual, artistic and scientific creation" (Article 54), and "freedom of expression and of assembly" (Article 55), the right to form and belong to trade unions, the right to work, the right to protection, security, health, rest and education (Articles 59-67), and also the right to "leave the country within the law" (which, however, imposed some restrictions). In Article 73 it was stated: "The law lays down conditions of forfeiture of fundamental rights and freedoms" of any person who used them "to commit an offence against the constitution, against the essential interests of the national community, against the unity of the People and against the socialist revolution".

Chapter 5, dealing with the duties of the citizen, provided in Article 76 that "the law sanctions the duty of parents in regard to the education and protection of their children as well as the duty of children to aid and assist their parents".

Chapters 6 and 7, dealing with the "National People's Army" and "Principles of Foreign Policy", reiterated the provisions of the National Charter in these respects.

Section 2. "Power and its organization".

Chapter 1 of this section recalled that "the system of Algeria's institutions is based on the one party principle" (Article 94) and emphasized that the National Liberation Front (FLN) constituted "the vanguard, leadership and organization of the people with the aim of building socialism" (Article 97). It continued: "The organs of party and of the State operate in separate cadres and by different means to achieve the same objectives" (Article 101). However, "the decisive responsibilities in the State are held by members of the party's leadership" (Article 102).

Chapter 2, dealing with the executive, determined the functions of the President of the Republic, who would have to be of Algerian origin, a Moslem and at least 40 years old, and who would have to be elected by direct, secret and universal suffrage for a six-year term which would be renewable. He was said to "incarnate the unity of the political leadership of the party and the State", and he would be nominated by the party's congress, to which he would be responsible. The President would also be Supreme Commander of the Armed Forces, and he would have power to appoint a Vice-President and a Prime Minister, whose powers would, however, be limited. In the event of the office of President falling vacant, the President (Speaker) of the National People's Assembly would assume the presidency ad interim and would organize presidential elections within 45 days, but he could not himself be a candidate (Article 117). The Head of Stete would also preside over a High Security Council, which would give advice on all questions relating to national security.

Chapter 3, dealing with the legislature, laid down that the members of the National People's Assembly would be elected for a five-year term by direct, secret and universal suffrage on the proposal of the party leadership, and that deputies would enjoy parliamentary immunity (Article 137). The Assembly would every year hold two ordinary sessions of not more than three months each, but its committees would be permanent. Bills could be introduced either by the President of the Republic or by the Assembly, the latter being able to legislate on all matters except National Defence (Article 151). While the Assembly was not in session, the President was empowered to legislate by order but would submit his laws to the Assembly at its subsequent session. The President also had powers to dissolve the Assembly or to decide on premature elections after agreement between the party leadership and the Government.

Chapters 4 and 5 dealt with the judiciary, in which judges would "obey only the law", and with audit (described as "an essential element of the revolutionary process"), with an audit office to be set up to check ad posteriori all public expenditure, including that of "socialist enterprises".

Chapter 6, dealing with the modalities of constitutional amendments, specified six areas which would not be subject to amendment-the republican form of Government, the state religion, the "socialist option", fundamental human and civic rights, the principle of direct, secret and universal suffrage and the country's territorial integrity (Article 195).

Section III. Sundry provisions

In this section it was stated in Article 198: "The entry into force of the Constitution shall not affect the powers of the existing organs as long as the corresponding institutions provided under under the Constitution have not been established".

POLITICAL PARTIES

Algeria has only one permitted political party, the National Liberation Front (FLN). Unlike nearly all the political parties in the Arab world - particularly the crop of Socialist Unions at the eastern end of the Mediterranean - the FLN can claim to be the party which created and brought about revolution and independence.

The FLN has its representatives in most walks of Algerian life, from workers' and students' unions and such organisations as those for journalists, youth, and women, to offices in each town. But in spite of claims by officials that the FLN policy is the product of interaction between members of the leadership and cadres on all levels, the weight of influence is undoubtedly from top to bottom.

JUSTICE

Following independence, Algeria inherited colonial judicial institutions that were primarily established in the larger towns where the European communities were concentrated. On June 19, 1965, the entire system was reformed by a decree that instituted a new judicial organisation. This decree was soon followed, in June 1966, by the promulgation of new legal codes-the penal code, the code of penal procedure, and the code of civil procedure. In formulating the new codes, the primary preoccupation was to make justice available to those who demanded it by permitting the citizen to appeal for justice with a minimum of delay and a maximum of efficaciousness. Fifteen courts and 132 tribunals were created, thus establishing a system of justice that covered the entire country, including the southern areas.

Three levels of justice were established. At the first level there exists the tribunal, to which civil and commercial litigation is submitted, and which takes action in penal cases of first instance. A single judge is empowered at this level. At the second level there is the court, which consists of a college of three members. It functions as a court of appeal for the tribunals and for the administrative jurisdictions of the first instance. At the third and highest level is the supreme Court, which checks and unifies the ensemble of jurisprudence. It enjoys the powers of a final court of appeal, and of appeals against the decisions of the lower courts.

Of the three fundamental legal documents on which the juridical system is based, the first, the penal code, reaffirms the principles protecting individual liberty; the second, the code of penal procedure, contains more detailed safeguards; while the third, the code of civil procedure, simplifies the conduct of judicial actions in order to eliminate delays, discourage abuses, and augment the efficiency of tribunals.

Three special courts for eliminating economic crimes against the state were established in 1966 those of Algiers, Oran, and Constantine; each is presided over by a member of the party and is composed of magistrates and of members representing the Ministry of Finance. Their decisions are without appeal.

THE ECONOMY

Algeria is one of the most important oil-producing countries in the world and is the largest exporter of liquified natural gas and the third most important producer of cork after Spain and Portugal. Until 1962, the economy was largely rural-based and complementary to that of France. Since independence, however, production of oil and natural gas has come into its own, and industrialisation has proceeded rapidly.

Hydrocarbons

Crude oil is of supreme economic importance accounting for over one-third of Gross Domestic Product (GDP), and for over 90% of export earnings. Total crude production amounted to 46.4 million tons in 1981 as against 56.9 million tons in 1979 and 51.5 million tons in 1980 due to the oil glut in world markets.

Proved recoverable reserves of crude oil as of January 1,1981 were estimated at 880 million tons and probable and possible reserves at about 360 million tons.

Gas reserves, estimated at 105,000 billion cubic feet, are the fourth largest in the world, after the Soviet Union, Iran and the United States. Despite sundry problems development has taken longer and been more expensive than expected and to difficulties and delays in the construction of liquifaction plants-the industry in Algeria is well placed to meet the projected growth in demand for natural gas over the next decade. The first of a series of major new liquifaction plants was opened in February 1978 and a number of others came on stream in 1982. Accordingly, annual liquified natural gas (LNG) sales are planned to rise from only 6.4 billion cubic metres (cbm) in 1979)the target was 14.4 billion cbm) to about 73.1 billion cbm in 1985 earning about 71/2 billion US dollars and making Algeria the World's largest LNG exporter. This level of export is expected to be maintained until the end of the century. Marketing the gas, however, has not been without problems. Failure to obtain US approval for two major contracts with US firms to supply 20 billion cbm a year necessitated the search for alternative markets. These have now been found in Europe, so that almost 50 billion cbm are already committed under contracts in operation or signed and approved, with contracts to supply a further 25 billion cbm awaiting confirmation. Accordingly, the United States, which was originally expected to be Algeria's largest LNG customer will, by 1985, have taken second place to Europe which is to purchase three-quaters of Algerian output.

Total capital investment in hydrocarbon development is estimated at 33 1/2 billion US Dollars between 1976 and 2005, with 22 billion US Dollars alone being spent on gas projects.

Other minerals

The country has extensive deposits of highgrade iron ore, mainly at Ouenza, and poorer quality ore at Gara Djebilet, near Tindouf. Deposits of nonferrous metal ores are small and widely scattered. There are, however, sizable deposits of zinc and lead at el-Abed on the Moroccan border near Tlemcen, and some 200,000 tons of mercury have been mined at Ismail since 1975. Traces of nickel, tin, cobalt, chrome and uranium have been found, and there are high hopes of finding tungsten, gold, platinum, and diamonds.

Reserves of phosphate deposits are estimated at about 1,000,000,000 tons.

Industry

The 1980-84 plan envisaged non-hydrocarbon industrial investment of AD 91.5 billion, some 23% of total investment. However, greater priority is being accorded to light industry, food processing and construction materials. The textile industry should particulary benefit from the completion of a number of schemes left unfinished during the previous plan. Cement production capacity is planned to be raised to 13 million tonnes while other construction-related activities will also receive a boost. The change in priorities is reflected in the housing programme which is allocated 15% of total investment; 450,000 dwelling units are to be built by 1984 and 2 million by 1990. The bulk of investment in the food sector is to be made with the aim of eliminating shortages and reducing dependence on food imports.

Heavy industry, which is state-owned, includes steel, fertilisers and petro-chemicals complexes. Present annual steel capacity of 400,000 tonnes is to be expanded to 1.8 million tonnes, while studies for a new works, providing an additional 2 million tonnes, have been completed. Although present steel requirements are estimated at around 5 million tonnes a year, further expansion plans have been postponed. Fertiliser capacity is being expanded to produce a surplus for export. Investment in petro-chemicals, however, is being restricted to US$500 million during the 1980-84 plan.

Agriculture

Agriculture output, reflecting the industrialisation drive, increased by less than 4% a year on average over the last decade and a half. Indeed, in some years in the 1970s production actually declined. A shortage of capital, lack of technical assistance to the farmer, unremunerative producer prices and insufficient infrastructure have been major contributory factors. As agriculture employs around a third of the labour force, the effect of this low growth has been far-reaching. Not only have agricultural exports declined but food imports now absorb nearly one-third of total export revenues, while unemployment and underemployment have led to an exodus to the urban centres and to France. Concerted attempts are now being made to increase agricultural production through a greater allocation of financial and technical resources to the sector; agriculture and associated activities are allocated AD47 billion under the 1980-84 programme, some 12% of total investment.

Public Finance

The 1982 central government budget totals some AD85 billion, of wich current expenditure is AD42 billion, 16.7% more than in 1981. The increase in primarily accounted for by expenditure on personnel, social welfare and public debt servicing. The remainder is to be spent through the Equipment Budget on development projects. Revenues are forecast to rise by almost 25%, with two-thirds coming from hydrocarbons, a similar proportion to 1981. Investment by state corporations is financed largely from their own income, and from external and domestic borrowing. Sonatrach, the state hydrocarbons concern, has announced development spending of some US$3.2 billion in 1982 and, in line with existing policy, there is to be no external commercial borrowing to finance projects.

THE BANKING SYSTEM

The Algerian banking system comprises the Central Bank and three large state-owned deposit money banks.

The Central Bank of Algeria - Established by Law No. 62-144 of December 13, 1962, and commenced operations in January 1963 by assuming the issue functions formerly undertaken by the French nationalised bank, Bank of Algeria. It has its headquarters in Algiers (8, Boulevard Zirout Youcef) and maintains agencies in Oran, Constantine, Annaba, Skikda, Tizi-Ouzou, Setif, Batna, Blida, El-Asnam, Mostaganem, Tiaret, Tlemcen, and Side-Bel-Abbes. Capital: DA 40 million.

Its board of directors determines the rules and regulations that govern the internal administration of the Bank, and it has broad powers over credit and money policies.

The National Bank of Algeria established in July 1966, has 144 branches in all parts of the country.

The Overseas Bank of Algeria was established in 1967 and conducts all banking activities through 24 branches in the main cities of the country.

The People's Bank of Algeria was established in November 1967 and maintains about 50 branches throughout the country.

INSURANCE COMPANIES

Insurance activities are carried out by two state-owned companies, the Insurance Corporation of Algeria, established by Ordinance No. 66-129 of May 27, 1966, and the Algerian Fund for Insurance and Reinsurance, established by Ordinance No. 66-127 of May 27, 1966.

Both these banks have assumed the activities of a number of insurance agencies, most of them branches of foreign companies, which had acted as institutional investors in the past. They now have a state monopoly over all insurance operations and function through their own agencies.

TRADING ORGANISATIONS

Office Algérien Interprofessionnel des Céréales (OAIC) - Algiers, monopoly of trade in cereals.

Société Nationale des Tabacs et Allumettes - Algiers. Sole importer of tobacco and matches.

Groupement d'Achat, d'Importation et de Répartition des Laits Conservés (GAILAC) - Algiers. Sole Importer and distributor of powder and condensed milk.

Groupement d'Importation Algérien de la Chaussure (GIAC) - Algiers. Sole importer of footwear.

Groupement Interprofessionnel des Textiles (GITEXAL) - Algiers. Sole importer and distributor of cotton piece goods and other fabrics.

Groupement d'Achat des Industries de Cuirs et Peaux (GICP) - Algiers. Sole importer and distributor of skins and hides.

Groupement d'Importation des Bois et Dérivés (BOIMEX) - Algiers.Sole importer and distributor of wood and timber.

Groupement d'Achat des Industries Textiles (CADIT) - Algiers. Sole importer and distributor of spindles, looms and other equipment for textiles mills.

Office National de Commercialisation (ONACO) - Algiers. Sole importer and distributor of staple consumer goods (meat, butter, tea, sugar etc.)

Société Nationale de Sidérurgie (SNS) - Algiers. Monopoly of the import trade of steel parts, metal parts and mechanical equipment.

Société Nationale de Matériaux de Construction (SNMC) - Algiers. Sole importer of building materials.

Société Nationale des Industries de Cellulose (SONIC) Algiers. Sole importer of materials for the paper and cardboard industries.

TRANSPORT

To meet the demands of a rapidly growing economy, investments for the imporvement and extension of the transportation system have been sharply increased.

Roads

A total of 44,000 miles of road includes 12,000 miles of national roads, about 12,000 miles of provincial roads, and 19,500 miles of local roads. A trans-Saharan road over 211 miles ensures connections between Algeria, Niger and Mali.

Railways

The railroad system consisting of almost 2,500 miles of track, is operated by the National Corporation of Algerian Railways. It connects all major cities in the north and extends to Tunisia and Morocco. There are five lines to the south, of which the most important is the Djebel-Onk - Annaba line for the transporation of iron ore and phosphates to the industrial centre of Annaba.

Shipping & Ports

There are 6 well-equipped and 14 secondary ports in Algeria. The port of Algiers handles most of the country's general cargo imports and exports. Most of the other ports are specialised: Arzew, for exports of crude oil and liquified natural gas; Bedjaia, for crude oil; Annaba for steel and iron ore exports; and Skikda, for exports of ammonia, refined petroleum products, crude oil, and liquified natural gas.

Maritime Agencies

1- Compagnie Nationale Algérienne de Navigation - Est. 1964. P.O.Box 280 Algiers. State-owned company operating its own fleet of 66 vessels, including tankers.

2- Office National des Ports-Est. 1971. P.O.Box 830 Algiers. Management of port facilities and other services, including towing, salvage, and shiphandling.

Civil Aviation

Algeria's main international airport is Dar al Beida situated about 12 1/2 miles from Algiers. Smaller airports are at Annaba, Constantine and Oran.

Air Algérie - Est. 1946. 1, Place Maurice Audin, Algiers, Telephone 63.07.06.

There are also regular services operated by other international airlines from London, with interchange at European cities, and several services a week from Tunis and Casablanca.

Algeria has many advantages which give it a great potential for tourism; a Mediterranean coast of over 620 miles, desert oases, a highly developed transportation system, and proximity to large tourist markets in Europe. Although promotional activity and investments in this sector have received secondary priorities, the improvement in basic infrastructure and the transport system indirectly has benefited the tourist sector, as has also the Government's considerable investment in hotels.Sizeable investments have been made in the five-year period between 1975 and 1980, with about 70 to 75 percent of the expansion located on the seashore and the balance mostly in the urban centres.

Two public agencies are in charge of the tourist sector:

a) Office National Algérien du Tourisme (National Tourist Bureau) responsible for the study and implementation of hotel projects. 25-27 Khelifa Boukhalfa street, Algiers.

b) Société Nationale Algérienne de Tourisme et d'Hotellerie (National Corporation of Tourism) charged with the management and operation of hotels, 8 rue du Dr. Saadane, Algiers.

GEOGRAPHY

Bahrain is an archipelago lying in the entrance to the Gulf of Salwa, 20 miles from the Hasa Province of Saudi Arabia and 18 from the Qatar Peninsula. The main island is pear-shaped running north and south with the broader end at the north. It is about 10 miles wide here, and its length is about 30 miles.

The greater part of the main island is desert and at its southern end tails off into a spit of sand. All round the center of the island there is an escarpment, like a huge crater where there is a sudden drop, in some places precipitous of about a hundred feet. The ground then rises again in a sort of dome, reaching a height of 450 feet at the Jabal Dukhan in the very center of the island. It is in this area that oil is found.

Off its northeast corner, and joined to it by a causeway one and a half miles long, lies the island of Muharraq. Further south, on the east side, are the small circular islands of Nabi Salih, completely covered with date orchards, and the larger island of Sitral.

Off the northwest corner of the main island there are three islands: Umm al-Sb'an, Jiddah island and Umm al Na'san. There are a number of smaller islands in the archipelago, most of them on the east side of the main island.

Urban centres

The two main centres of population are the towns of Manama and Muharraq.

Manama is the business centre.

Muharraq, of truly Arab appearance has electricity and a pipe water supply. Hiss, the third town, is sited at the southeast end of Muharraq island.

However, the most important development in recent years is Isa town which boasts the most imaginative housing scheme in the Middle East, incorporating the complete range of urban services: municipal offices, police and firefighting stations, mosques, schools for boys and girls, outpatient clinics, a traffic-free shopping centre and a sports stadium.

Religion

The overwhelming majority of the population in Bahrain are Muslims whose religion permeates every aspect of their daily life. The two main sects are the Shia, which originated in Arabia, and the Sunni, or Orthodox, Sect.

The dates of the religious festivals are variable and follow the Islamic calendar, which is based on a cycle of 12 lunar months of 29 or 30 days each, making a 355-day year. Ramadan, the great religious feast, lasts for about four weeks.

Public holidays (1983)

Mulid al Naby-birthday of the Prophet (16 December); Eid al Fitr, end of Ramadan, Muslim month of fasting and self-purification (11-13 july); Eid al Adha, feast of the Sacrifice (17-20 September); Muslim New Year, first day of AH 1403 (7 october); Ashura, day of mourning fo shi'ite Muslims (16 october).

The recorded history of Bahrain goes back to the third millineum BC, when Sargon of Akkad, the great Semetic king, conquered Dilmun, by which Bahrain is thought to have been known. Dilumn figures in many Mesopotamian writings as a major trading centre serving as the half-way house between the civilisations of Mesopotamia and the Indus valley. In the 8th century B.C., it was seized by another Sargon, this time the Assyrian king of that name.

This was one of the first areas outside the Arabian Peninsula to accept the religion of Islam (in the 7th century AD). Subsequently the Bahrain islands had a chequered career, being at times independent and at times under the domination or fulers from the mainland of Arabia. There were two brief spells of foreign control: the Portuguese exercising fitful rule from 1522 to 1602; to be replaced by the Persians, whose control was equally tenous. In 1782 the first of the al-Khalifa sheikhs - Ahmed - seized Bahrain from the Persians.

During the second half of the 19th century, the rulers of Bahrain signed a number of agreements with Britain by virtue of which Britain undertook to defend Bahrain against aggression.

Independence

Bahrain made its debut on the world stage in the early 1960's when contacts were made with many States, notably those of the Arab world. Formal international recognitions of its independence was declared in May 1970 by unanimous vote of the Security Council.

Bahrain was admitted to membership of the Arab League and the United Nations in 1971.

Bahrain coup attempt

On May 22, 1982, Bahrain's High Court jailed three people for life and sentenced 70 others to shorter terms of imprisonment in connection with a coup attempt in December 1981.

The 73 were accused of plotting to overthrow the Government with alleged Iranian backing.

The shorter terms consisted of 15 years each for 60 of the convicted people and seven years for the remaining 10. Foreign journalists were barred from the trial, held in a remote coastal prison.

The public prosecution had sought the death penalty for all the defendants whom it charged with crimes against state security in cooperation with a foreign power.

The Government had foiled the coup attempt a few days before it was to be carried out on December 16, Bahrain's National Day.

It has accused Iran of providing the defendants with training and weapons but Iran has denied the charge.

The defendants were 60 Bahrainis, 11 Saudi and one each from Kuwait and Oman. Fifteen were under the age of 18.

The defendants had also been charged with belonging to a clandestine organisation called the Islamic Front for the Liberation of Bahrain which had planned to stage an Iranian-style revolution.

The prosecution said that in addition they had been accused of illegaly possessing arms and explosives with the aim of damaging public installations and spreading terror..

In June 1973 a 108-article constitution was ratified. It states that "all citizens are equal before the law" and guarantees "freedom of speech, of the press, of conscience and worship". The constitution also provides for a financial comptroller answerable to the National Assembly, for free primary education and free medical care.

The National Assembly was dissolved in August 1975 following the resignation of the Prime Minister.

Justice is administered in accordance with Sharia (Islamic Canon Law), and for almost two de cades now various legislative texts have been promulgated in replacement of British legal jurisdiction which was terminated in 1971.

Bahrainis and foreign residents alike are under the jurisdiction of the native courts.

Health service is free for all Bahrainis and foreign residents. The first Bahrain Government hospital was opened in 1938 and by 1972 beds in State hospitals totalled 907, rising to 1400 in 1977. The additions covered two maternity hospitals in the villages, a T.B. sanatorium, and a mental hospital.

EDUCATION

The modern system of education in Bahrain dates back to 1919 when the Khalifa School was opened in Muharraq to be followed, nine years later, by the inauguration in Manama of Bahrain's first Girls' School.

Education is free. From the ages of six to twelve boys and girls attend primary school. Intermediate stage lasts two years and is followed by a three-year secondary stage. Some 22% of the Stage budget is allocated to education.

Higher education is provided either at home or abroad.

Like the Kuwaitis, the Bahrainis' main source of livelihood until oil was discovered in 1930 was fishing and pearling. The pearl-fishing industry, much reduced in size though today, has a romantic flavour because of its immense antiquity, the courage and endurance of the divers, the picturesque quality of the whole operation and the beauty of the product. From the earliest times, every visitor to the Gulf has mentioned the pearl banks. Bahrain has no monopoly, but its pearls have always had a special reputation. «Fishes eyes» from Dilnum mentioned on an inscribed Sumarian tablet, must have been Bahraini pearls.

The industry was dealt an almost mortal blow by the development of the Japanese cultured pearl in the early 1930s and it was a fortunate coincidence that the oilmen came along at much the same time to rescue the economy.

Petroleum Sector

The Petroleum sector is one of the most important sources of income in Bahrain. In 1980, oil revenues accounted for 72% of total government revenues-up by 2% over 1979, although oil produced from Bahrain field decreased by 5. 8% which was slightly more than in 1979. The shrinkage in volume of output is due to the natural factors affecting Dahrain field which led to a fall in production in 1980 to 17.65 million barrels compared with 18.74 million barrels in 1979.

Daily average oil production in Bahrain decreased from 51,000 barrels in 1979 to decreased from 51,000 barrels in 1979 to 48,000 barrels in 1980.

However, the oil authorities in Bahrain are still studying and prospecting for other sources of oil on Bahrain's land and its territorial waters. Under the present circumstances, oil in Bahrain will last for about 20 years but if new production techniques are applied, it may last for 30 years.

Oil Developments

The most important development in the oil industry in Bahrain during 1980 was the agreement between the Government of Bahrain and the American company CALTEX, owner of the Bahrain Petroleum Company Ltd (BAPCO) which owns and operates the oil refinery in Bahrain. Under the terms of this agreement, the Government of Bahrain acquired 60% of the refinery. The refinery processes 250,000 barrels of oil daily, 80% of the crudes comes from Saudi Arabia.

No less significant is the setting up of the Higher Petroleum Council in November 1980, under the chairmanship of the Prime Minister, Shaikh Khalifa bin Salman al-Khalifa.The Council formulates the overall oil policy including the conservation of oil reserves, the provision of alternatives the supervision of any petroleum organisation that may be established and the development of oil-related industries.

Natural Gas

The production of non-associated natural gas fell in 1980 by 13% or 18.6 billion cubic feet to 123.4 billion cubic feet as against 142 billion in 1979. This is the first time in five years when the output declined as against the average annual increase of about 9% in production for the period 1975-1979.

Natural gas is needed by Aluminium Bahrain (ALBA), Bahrain National Gas Company(BANAGAS) and the Gulf Petro-chemical Company which use it as an input for their production processes.

Economic Diversification

Since the late 1960s Bahrain has implemented development projects to diversify the economy, thereby reducing the country's heavy dependence on petroleum and also providing employment opportunities for the Bahraini population, which is estimated at somewhat over 300,000. An Aluminum smelter began operation in April 1971. The smelter, which is 78 per cent government-owned, has a capacity of 120,000 tons a year and has been operating at about that rate since 1974. Aluminum is imported from Australia and most of the production is exported, mainly to the Far East. An expansion programme completed in 1977 has boosted productive capacity to 165, 000 tons. The smelter, which employs over 2,000 people, is one of the largest sources of employment in Bahrain. Three ancillary industries use aluminum either in molten or ingot form as the basic raw material: an aluminum atomizer, an extrusion plant, and a cable factory.

The International Bahrain Aluminium Atomizer Company

The Company, with 51% ownership by the Government of Bahrain and 49% by Burton Investment Company, started its operations in 1972. In consonance with favourable market conditions and accentuated demand, steps were taken in 1979 to expand its capacity to 7000 metric tons and the target was achieved in May 1980 at an estimated cost of BD. 80,000 raising the total outlay todate to BD. 375,000.

The Bahrain Aluminium Extrusion Company (BALEXCO)

Established by an Amiri Decree in February 1977, Balexco is wholly owned by the Government of Bahrain. The company went into operation in March 1977 and has an annual capacity of 4000 tons. Steps were taken in 1980 to enlarge the anode system so as to expand the capacity of oxygenation unit to 4500 tons at a cost of BD. 270,000. The expansion was planned to meet the increased demand for its output of which 80% is exported to Gulf countries.

The Middle East Aluminium Cable Ltd. (MIDAL).

Owned by the Australian Olex Company and the Bahraini Intersteel Company, MIDAL started production in June 1978. It exports extensively aluminium rails and cables to Gulf countries, of which more than a third goes to Saudi Arabia specially after the establishment of the Saudi company for aluminium cables in Jeddah which relies on the co-operation of MIDAL for producing 5,000 tons of cables annually.

The Gulf Aluminium Rolling Mill Company.

Jointly owned by Saudi Arabia, Kuwait, Iraq, Bahrain, Qatar and Oman, its share capital of BD. 24 million is owned to the extent of 20% each by the first four and 10% each by the last two of the participating countries. This is the first industrial enterprise which has been established within the framework of the Gulf Organization for Industrial Consulting.

Arab Shipbuilding and Repair Yards (ASRY)

The other major project outside the petroleum sector is the Arab Shipbuilding and Repair Yard, owned by seven members of the Organization of Arab Petroleum Exporting Countries (including Bahrain, which has a 19 per cent share). Opened in late 1977, the dry dock can accommodate crude oil tankers of up to 450,000 deadweight tons. In the first year, 130 ships were repaired at the dry dock. Between 1977 and September 1981, ASRY has repaired 485 vessels both inside the drydock and alongside the jetties. Most of these were VLCCs (very large crudes carriers) of different nationalities, including 65 Arab owned. The average occupancy rate during the period was 90%. Bahrain's dependence on foreign labor is well illustrated by this project. The dry dock was built largely by a Korean company on land reclaimed by a Netherlands dredging firm, while management is provided by a Portuguese shipyard.

More recently, the Government has focused on developing Bahrain into a major regional service and finance center. The main features of this effort are a substantial upgrading of the infrastructure, which accelerated in late 1975, and the establishment of an offshore banking center. The commercial port of Bahrain, Mina Sulman, was expanded, new warehouses were built, and the efficiency of port operations was improved, so that the cargo discharge rate was quadrupled. A major electricity generating and water-desalination project, the Sitra Power Station, was completed in 1977, and the first two of five 50-mega watt generators at the Rifaa Power Station were installed in 1978, raising generating capacity by 32 per cent. Construction activity boomed, as the demand for housing and office space was stimulated by the growth in private sector enterprises - including a major expansion of Gulf Air (based in Bahrain) - and as the Government embarked on an ambitious programme of housing construction. To encourage the growth of the services sector, in 1977 the Government authorized the exemption of companies engaged in non-banking business from the provision of Bahrain's commercial law that requires 51 per cent Bahraini ownership, thus promoting the establishment of mainly service-oriented business to engage in operations outside the Bahrain economy. A major project under preparation is the construction of a 25-kilometer causeway linking Bahrain with Saudi Arabia's eastern province, due to be completed in 1985 at a cost of $ 1 billion. The causeway is expected to enhance Bahrain's entrepôt trade and to enlarge the market for Bahrain's service industries.

BANKING SYSTEM

At the end of 1980 the financial and banking system in Bahrain consisted of the Bahrain Monetary Agency, 19 commercial banks, 2 specialised financial institutions, namely Bahrain Islamic Bank, and the Housing Bank, 67 reporting offshore banking units, 48 representative offices of foreign banks, 9 investment banks, 21 insurance companies, 6 money brokers, 17 money changers, a state pension fund and a social insurance fund.

The Bahrain Monetary Agency, established in 1973, has all the usual powers of a Central Bank, such as the licensing, inspection and supervision of financial institutions, stipulation of reserve requirements, open market operations, regulation of credit, and service as the Government's banker.

Banking developments in Bahrain, measured by the commercial banks' consolidated balance sheet without contra accounts, were marked by an increase of BD 154.2 million, or 21% to BD 900.9 million during 1980 compared with the growth of 8% in 1979.

HISTORY

Independence

The former French territory of the Afars and Issas became the independent republic of Djibouti at midnight on June 26, 1977, following approval of the relevant legislation by the French Parliament earlier in the month.

The achievement of independence was celebrated on June 27 at a ceremony organised by the "Ligue Populaire Africaine Pour l'Indépendance", the ruling party representing mainly the Issas (the country's majority ethnic group, akin to the Somalis), and in the presence of M. Robert Galley, the French Minister of Cooperation, and M. Olivier Stirn, French Secretary of State for Overseas Departments and Territories, both having been invited by Mr. Hassan Gouled Aptidon, the leader of the LPAI.

Mr. Hassan Gouled Aptidon (63) who was at that time also Premier and in charge of Cooperation had, on June 24, by acclamation, been elected President of the Republic by the territorial Chamber of Deputies. The new President subsequently declared that the country's official language would be Arabic, and that the Republic of Djibouti would be non-aligned and remain committed to free enterprise.

The new Republic was immediately recognised by numerous countries, among them, Britain, China, Ethiopia, Saudi Arabia (and many other Arab countries), Somalia and the Soviet Union.

Furthermore on June 27, the Government of President Gouled applied for admission to the Organisation of African Unity and to the Arab League.

A French proposal to recommend to the UN General Assembly for the admission of the Republic of Djibouti to the United Nations was approved unanimously by the UN Security Council on July 7.

The territory of the Afars and Issas, formerly known as French Somaliland,had been a French possession for 115 years. It covered an area of some 9,000 square miles consisting mainly of desert country. In the absence of natural resources its population, apart from nomads, was economically dependent on the port of Djibouti, the coastal terminal of the Addis Ababa-Djibouti railway line, which had been completed in 1917. The line had been the property of the French-owned France-Ethiopian Railway Company until 1959, when President de Gaulle ceded 50% of its capital to the Ethiopian state and it became a company under Ethiopian law, with its head office in Addis Ababa.

Until May 1977 it carried about 60% of Ethiopia's imports and 40% of its exports, the remainder being handled by the Eritrean ports of Assab and Massawa.

Political Turnmoil

The pre-independence months were hectic. Hassan Hassan Gouled announced that the programme of his Government was exactly the same as that of his LPAI: independence during the first four months of 1977, "detribalization" of political life, revision of the lists and laws on nationality, and destruction of the barbed-wire barrier around Djibouti. For his part, Kamil, the Foreign Minister, said he did not think that a sudden withdrawal of French troops after independence would be desirable from either the economic or defence point of view; he doubted if such a pull-out would be required by the future independent Government. After a meeting in Paris with President Giscard d'Estaing on 4 August 1976, Kamil said the people of Djibouti need no longer fear annexation by Somalia: "The stages for our accession to independence have been fixed. Unity has been achieved, and we shall no longer accept any intervention or diktat from any quarter in our external relations." Tribal rivalry between Afars and Issas, he said, had disappeared. At the same time, Olivier Stirn announced that the referendum on Djibouti's independence would be held before the end of January 1977, but by October he had the date put back yet again to the spring of 1977.

Meanwhile, there was a leadership upheaval within the ranks of the Front for the liveration of the Somali Coast (FLCS), Dr. Salah Nour resigned as acting president of the Front and took up political asylum in Ethiopia, where on 8 September he alleged that the FLCS and Somalia were collaborating in planning military activity against Djibouti after independence in order to realize the "expansionist" goals of Somalia. The FLCS, on 12 September, denounced Dr. Nour as a "traitor" and an "imperialist stooge". On 19 September, the FLCS met an LPAI delegation led by Agmed Dini in Mogadishu for "routine talks". In October, a 46-member Djibouti delegation, led by the Parliamentary Opposition leader, Senator Gourat, attended celebrations in Mogadishu marking the seventh anniversary of the Somali coup d'état. He said there would be no French military bases in Djibouti after independence, and accused Ethiopia of meddling in the Territory's affairs and of infiltrating people into the TFAI. By the end of the year, the Djibouti-Somali rapprochement was complete enough to allow Kamil himself to visit Mogadishu, where he thanked Somalia for its assistance to Government, and repeated its claim that people of Djibouti rejected Ethiopia's request for guarantees of Djibouti's future independence.

In November, Stirn returned to Djibouti for talks on the future of the French military presence, and confirmed that Djibouti would be independent by the summer of 1977. He also announced that all the Territory's parties and liberation movements would be invited to participate in a conference in Paris in January 1977, the first time France had appeared to consider a role for the Somali-backed MLD in planning the independence transition. In a speech on 20 December, President Siyad Barre stressed the things that Somalia and Ethiopia had in common, called on the Ethiopian people to reject the "Progaganda" of their rulers about Somalia's intentions over Djibouti, and raised the prospect of a Confederation on the Horn of Africa.

Government Crisis

On December 17,1977 the resignation was announced of Djibouti's Prime Minister. Mr Ahmed Dini Ahmed and of four other ministers: Mr Ahmed Hassan Ahmed (Defence), Mr Ahmed Youssef Houmed (Public Health and Social Affairs), Mr Ali Mohammed Houmed (Industry) and Mr Hamad Abdallan Hamad (Youth and Sports), all five of them being members of the Afar community.

These resignations followed the arrest of some 600 Afars after a hand-grenade attack had been made on Dec. 15 on a Djibouti restaurant frequented by Frenchmen, leading to the death of six persons and injury to at least 30 others. Mr Ahmed Dini had there-upon accused the government (which is dominated by Issas) of carrying out "tribal repression" against the Afars who, he said, could not be held collectively responsible for the violence.

There had been several earlier incidents said to have involved Afars.

In October 1977, the Government seized a supply of arms (including about 100 Kalashnikov rifles of Soviet origin) destined for Afars fighting on the side of the Military Government of Ethiopia. On Oct. 16 two armed Afars from Ethiopia attacked a Twin Otter Aircraft of Air Djibouti at Tadjourah (the country's second city) and killed its French pilot, and one of its passengers, the mother of Mr. Ismael Ali Youssef, the Minister of Justice, who was known to be a strong supporter of the Western Somalia Liberation Front.

On the resignation of the Prime Minister, President Hassan Gouled Aptidon himself took over the premiership after announcing in a statement issued on the previous day that the Mouvement Populaire de Liberation (MPL), an Afar group of Marxist-Leninist leanings, had been banned and claiming that the Ethiopian Government was responsible for arming the Afar terrorists.

The unrest among Afars was attributed to grievances which they felt, especially in the city of Djibouti where they were in a minority against the Issas, who had a majority in the Government and whose numbers had been increased by the influx of militants from Somalia. The left-wing sections of the Afars enjoyed support from the Military Government of Ethiopia, whose Red Sea ports of Massawa and Assab were threatened by Eritrean secessionists and which was therefore interested in restoring its access to the Red Sea through the port of Djibouti; this access had been denied them since the cutting of the Addis Ababa-Djibouti railway line by Somali insurgents in June 1977 as a result of which the line was operative in only three sections- between Djibouti and the Ethiopian border, between that border and an area north of Dire Dawa, and between Addis Ababa and an area south of Dire Dawa.

According to a retired French army officer quoted on Dec. 29, the country was, as a result of the conflict between Afars and Issas, in effect divided into three parts- (i) the main part of the city of Djibouti, controlled by the Government, (ii) an Issa area which no Afar ventured to enter, and (iii) an Afar area, in which there were barracks of the French Foreign Legion and of the Djibouti Army, the latter trying to keep the dissident Afars in check; moreover, there were in practice no longer any frontiers between Somalia and the Issa area (in the south-east) and between Ethiopia and the Afar area (in the west and north).

At the end of a visit to Paris on Aug. 16-19, 1977, by President Hassan Gouled Aptidon, accompanied by eight members of his Cabinet, Mr Abdallah Mohamed Kamil, the Foreign Minister, had announced that France had agreed (i) to speed up the formation of Djibouti's national Army by training 3,700 men, instead of only 2,500 as provided for in earlier cooperation agreements, and (ii) to grant Djibouti a special budget subsidy, the amount of which was still to be fixed.

Despite the cordiality of the French connection, Djibouti is looking around for other countries to assist both economically and militarily. For while French aid is large, yet it is only half the level of French support before independence. Furthermore, the French community in Djibouti is shrinking. One adverse factor to the country's viability is the Ethiopia-Somalia war and the breakdown of central authority inside Ethiopia have hit Djibouti economy badly.

Meanwhile, Saudi Arabia has committed US $ 60 million to be spent on infrastructure projects by 1981. Abu Dhabi and Bahrain have also come forward with offers totalling US $ 19 million. During 1978/79 Djibouti was host to programming missions from the EEC, Kuwait, Qatar, Tunisia, West Germany and the Arab Industrial Development Centre.

During 1980 the Government had begun to make efforts to achieve "step by step" progress towards peace between Ethiopia and Somalia, always on the basis of maintaining "strict equidistance between Addis Ababa and Mogadishu" as was emphasised by Mr Moumin Bahdon Farah, the Minister of Foreign Affairs.

During 1981 President Hassan Gouled Aptidon paid visits to Ethiopia (on March 15-21); Kenya (on March 21-25), Somalia (on April 10-16), the Sudan (on April 18-20) and South Yemen.

At the end of the visit to Ethiopia, a treaty of friendship and co-operation, agreements on economic, technical and scientific co-coperation and a general agreement on transport, including arrangements relating to the Djibouti-Addis Ababa railway, were signed between the two countries on March 21.

At the end of the visit to Kenya, the Presidents of the two countries reaffirmed their determination to promote and further strengthen co-operation between them.

Overwhelming vote for Gouled

The general election held in Djibouti on May 21, 1982, showed popular approval for President Hassan Gouled's policies.

Results of the poll to elect a new 65-man National Assembly were a foregone conclusion since Djibouti is a one-Party state, but a large abstention rate would have indicated a lack of support for President Gouled.

The general election was the first since this Northeast African country gained its independence from France in 1977.

The results released by the Interior Ministry showed that out of 85.995 electors 78.031 voted for representatives of the Popular Rally for Progress (RPP) Party. Only 6.615 voters abstained and 1.359 ballot papers were either blank or spoiled.

Foreign Minister Moumin Bahdon Farah, who is also Secretary General of the RPP, expressed satisfaction with the results which showed loyalty to the President.

The Djibouti leader has sought to narrow long-standing differences between the two dominant tribes: the Issas, who are linked to Somalia, and the Afars, who spread across the border into Ethiopia.

GEOGRAPHY

Land Area

The area of the Arab Republic of Egypt is about one million square kilometers, or nearly 238 million feddans (a feddan is slightly more than one acre, being 1.038 acre), of which only about 5,967,600 feddans (2.5 %) are cultivated.

The total area under cultivation in Lower Egypt is 3,478,993 feddans as against 2,394,862 feddans in Upper Egypt and 93,745 feddans in other areas. However as the average rate of cropping per feddan is 1.68 crops per year, this gives the country an equivalent of 10,001,030 feddans of cropped area. It is important, in this respect, to distinguish between the two terms, the cultivated area and the cropped area.

The cultivated area is the number of feddans actually planted, whereas the cropped area (also expressed in feddans) is the cultivated area multiplied by the number of crops sown annually under perennial irrigation when several crops can be planted in rotation on the same land in the same area. The area that can be cultivated wholly depends on the level of the land in relation to the nearest supply of water. On the basis that the economic lift for water is at present limited to 20 meters, the total cultivable area is estimated at 10 million feddans.

Climate

Basically, the A.R.E. can be divided into two climatic zones. The first comprises the Mediterranean coastal areas, including the Delta. The climate of this zone is of Mediterranean type, which is characterised by a mild rainy winter and a hot dry summer. The second zone covers the rest of Egypt south of Cairo. This is of the desert type, characterised by a winter with very little rain, warm during the day and cold during the night, and a dry summer, hot by day and mild during the night.

Population

The population of the A.R.E. in the 1982 census totalled 45,000,000. Statistics also show that about two-thirds of the country's active labour force are engaged in agriculture and allied activities.

Population density has increased by more than 63 percent over the last 43 years, moving from 446 people to the square kilometre in 1937 to 763 people in 1980, according to the Egyptian Gazette daily newspaper of April 4, 1980 quoting the last special report of the Egyptian Central Statistical Agency.

Religion

Of a total population of 45,000,000 recorded in 1982 over 90 per cent are Sunni Muslims of the Hanafi and Shafi's sects, Islam being the official religion of the State.

The Christian communities, including Greeks, Italians, and other Europeans, and also Syrians and Lebanese have seen their numbers thinned down following the sweeping nationalisation measures of 1961.

The other Middle Eastern Christian communities (Greek Orthodox and Greek Catholic, Syrian Orthodox and Syrian Catholic and Maronite), enjoy a fairly stable position, though emigration to Canada and Australia has drained away the younger generations.

The long-resident Egyptian-Jewish community has been greatly diminished by emigration to Israel, since the 1956 Suez War.

The Copts, variously estimated at between 8,000,000 and 10,000,000, mainly peasants but also landowners and town-dwellers are authentic Egyptians with no other home or allegiance. The majority of Copts have kept their ancient faith (monophysite Christianity), minorities have accepted protestantism, other Catholicism, while conversions to Islam are not infrequent.

Public holidays (1983):

Union Day (22 February); Sianai Day (25 April) — Labour Day (1May); Sham El Nessim (Spring Day) (9 May); Evacuation Day (18 June); Eid al Fitr (11-13 July); Revolution Day (23 July); Wafa El Nil (15 August); Eid al Adha (17-20 September); Armed Forces Day (6 October); Muslim New Year (7 october); Suez city and Popular Resistance Day (24 October); Prophet's Birthday (16 December: Victory Day (23 December); New Year (Gregorian Calendar) (1 January).

Remark

The Muslim year has only 354 or 355 days, so Muslim dates and holidays fall 10 to 12 days earlier each year on the Gregorian calendar.

Foreign Invaders

From 30 B.C. to A.D. 639 Egypt was a Province of the Roman Empire, but in A.D. 640 the Christian inhabitants were subjugated by Moslem invaders, and Egypt became a province of the Eastern Caliphate. In 1517, the country was incorporated in the Ottoman Empire and was governed by Pashas sent from Constantinople until the beginning of the 18th century, when for about 100 years the ruler was chosen from among the Mamelukes, or body-guard. Muhammad Ali, who was proclaimed Pasha in 1795, exterminated the Mamelukes in 1811 and was eventually made hereditary governor of Egypt and the Sudan by a firman from the Sultan on June 1, 1841.

In 1882, a military revolt, headed by an officer of the Egyptian Army (Ahmad Orabi Pasha) assumed alarming proportions and a British expedition was despatched to reestablish the authority of the Khedive. Meanwhile a revolt had broken out in the southern provinces, headed by Shaikh Muhammad Ahmad of Dongola, who proclaimed himself a Mahdi of Islam, and the British expeditionary force, sent to quell the rebellion of 1882, remained in the country as an army of occupation, until 1936.

British Occupation

During the war of 1914-18 a British Protectorate over Egypt was declared (December 18, 1914) and the Khedive Abbas Hilmi was deposed. He was succeeded by Prince Hussein Kamel with the title of Sultan, and died on October 9, 1917 being succeeded by his brother, Prince Ahmad Fuad.

On the outbreak of war in 1914, Egypt was immediately and for ever severed from her long but now meaningless Turkish connection, and became a Sultanate under declared British protection, a status which Egyptian politicians strongly resented. After the war period, in which Egypt served as an important Allied base and entrepot, its future status became in 1919-22 a burning question which led to a series of demands and refusals, demonstrations and imprisonments, diplomatic missions and outbreaks of violence. Finally in 1922 a unilateral declaration by Britain confirmed the country's formal independence, as a constitutional monarchy.

In the Second World War Egypt took no part save that, again, of Allied base, a role which, in selfdefence, compelled the British to a measure of interference in Egyptian affairs.

The King Abdicates

On July 23, 1952, following a military coup d'Etat, King Farouk was forced to abdicate and left the country on July 26. His property was sequestrated. The King's infant son Ahmad Fuad II became King of Egypt, and a Regency Council was appointed Autust 5, 1952.

On June 18, 1953, the Council of Revolution deposed the young king, and declared Egypt a Republic, and Bikbashi (Lieutenant-Colonel) Gamal Abdel Nasser assumed the premiership.

The Suez Conflict (1956)

In July 1956, after America and Britain had withdrawn their offers to help finance Egypt's Aswan Dam project, President Nasser summarily expropriated the Suez Canal Company. On October 29th the Israelis invaded Sinai, advancing to points near the Suez Canal. Britain and France demanded that both belligerents cease fire and allow them to occupy key places belong the Canal. Egypt refused, and on November 5th British and French troops seized Port Said. Egypt blocked the Canal by sinking ships in it. Only a few hours after the Port Said landing all four parties ceased fire. The United Nations Assembly demanded almost unanimously that Britain, France and Israel withdraw from Egyptian soil, and an international UN force was sent to the Canal and Sinai to help prevent further conflicts.

Death of President Nasser

On September 28, 1979, President Gamal Abdel Nasser died in Cairo at the age of 52 due to coronary thrombosis. His death occurred only 24 hours after the ending of the Cairo summit meeting which had succeeded in bringing to an end the civil war in Jordan.

Following Nasser's death, Sadat became acting president and after the unanimous approval of his candidature for the presidency by the National Assembly his election was confirmed by a national referendum on October 15 in which 90.04% of the votes cast were affirmative.

Soviet Military Advisers withdrawn from Egypt

In an entirely unexpected and unanticipated development President Sadat announced the immediate departure from Egypt of all Soviet military advisers and experts in the country, and their replacement by Egyptian personnel. (Western sources estimated the number of Soviet advisers and experts in Egypt to be in the region of 20,000).

Desequestration

On April 19, 1972, a parliamentary committee recommended that millions of pounds worth of property arbitrarily seized from Egyptian citizens since 1964 should be returned to their owners.

Other reforms announced by the President on Sept. 16 included: 1) a rise in minimum wages which would cost the State LE. 40,000,000 annually; 2) the setting up of an Egyptian Bank for Foreign Trade; 3) the creation of «technical bureaux» consisting of experts serving under the President's advisers; 4) the reinstatement of 112 judges who had been transferred or retired by President Nasser as a disciplinary measure; 5) the restoration of full political rights to some 12,000 persons who had been under political restrictions since 1962.

The Fourth Arab-Israeli war

The fourth war between the Arab states and Israel since 1948 broke out on Oct. 6,1973, when a powerful Egyptian offensive was launched across the Suez Canal and an equally strong Syrian offensive on the Golan Heights.

After some of the bitterest and bloodiestfighting since the Second World War, marked by great tank battles and heavy losses of men and material on both sides. Egypt and Israel agreed to a cease-fire on Oct. 22 in response to a resolution of the UN Security Council, and after the truce had been broken, agreed on Oct. 24 to cease hostilities in response to a second Security Council resolution.

War aftermath

A number of important developments tooks place in Egypt following the fourth Arab-Israel war of October 1973, notably the drafting and adoption in a referendum, of a far-reaching plan for economic, social and political reforms for the transformation of Egypt into a completely modern society by the end of the 20th century.

The main points of this programme were: (1) the rapid economic development of the country during the last quarter of the century, envisaging economic development at a faster rate than hitherto and with priority for the reconstruction of the wardevastated towns of the Suez Canal; (2) an «open door» financial policy designed to attract foreign investors by establishing industrial free zones, giving investors liveral terms for the repatriation of their profits, and assuring them of protection against nationalization and confiscation; (3) non-alignment in foreign affairs; (4) an «open society» in which the rights of all citizens would be protected by the courts against police interference and bureau cracy; (5) systematic planning for social development, and for the application of science, technology and cultural progress based upon both science and the Islamic religion; (6) a pledge to maintain the public sector of the economy while at the same time creating a new free-entreprise sector to complement it.

Sadat's Peace Initiative

Historic developments in Arab-Israeli relations took place in the latter part of 1977 when President Sadat visited Jerusalem on November 19.

On Dec. 5, Sadat broke relations with Syria and the rejectionist states. Egypt's isolation from the Arab world was widened when, in April 1979, diplomatic relations were severed with Jordan, Kuwait, Lebanon, Mauritania, Morocco, Tunisia, Saudi Arabia, Yemen Arab Republic (North Yemen), Qatar & Djibouti, as a result of which Egypt was blacklisted. One concrete result of the Arab boycott was the decision by the Organisation of Arab Petroleum Exporting Countries (OAPEC) at its ministerial - level meeting in Kuwait in April 1979 to suspend Egypt's membership in the Organisation and its subsidiary companies: the Arab Petroleum Investment Corporation, the Arab Maritime Petroleum Transport Company, the Arab Shipbuilding and Repair Yard and the Arab Petroleum Services Company.

Egypt's membership has also been suspended in the Arab Monetary Fund, the Arab Bank for Economic Development in Africa, the Riyadh-based Arab Investments Company and the Amman-based Arab Mining Company, as well as in the Arab Union of Chemical Fertilizers Producers, the Arab Union for Iron and Steel Industries, the Arab Union for Textile Industries, the Arab Labour Organisation and the General Federation of Arab Chambers of Commerce, Industry and Agriculture.

Manifestations of Opposition

At home, major developments in the political and security sphere occurred in 1980 and 1981. These included: increasingly outspoken criticism of President Sadat's policies not only from the left-wing oppisition parties but also from independent political personalities, (ii) further arrests of alleged communist subversives and other unauthorised opposition elements, (iii) a government propaganda offensive against the opposition, notably the Socialist Labour party, and(iv) continued unrest among Islamic fundamentalist opponents of the Government.

Violent incidents involving fundamentalist students at the University of Asiyut caused the university to be closed for a week in November 1980; at least 10 students were expelled and several arrests were reported, including that of an Iranian, Mr. Falahudin Mohammed Kajee, who was said to be a member of the «Fedayeen Islam».

Egypt - Israeli Relations

Meanwhile, normalisation of relations between the two countries under the provisions of the Camp David peace treaty have progressed markedly in 1981. The number of agreements signed on cultural, economic, transport and tourism matters has reached 35 and, according to Egyptian officials, exchanges with Israel now far exceed Egypt's relations with most European and Asian countries.

Even the Israelis have tempered their previous complaints of Egyptian footdragging, saying that although relations are not as full as they would have hoped, «we know where to go from here». Official concern in Tel Aviv that, following the Israeli withdrawal from Sinai on April 25, talks would end as Egypt gradually returned to the Arab fold, appears to have dissipated.

Stumbling block

Egyptian officials say they have no intention of improving their relations with the Arab world at the expense of the Israelis and fully intend to put into action all agreements. But they point to the Arab boycott of Israel as the biggest stumbling block to an increase in economic links.

Trade nevertheless increased from $12m in 1980 to between $14m and $15m in 1981, mostly Israeli exports to Egypt of foodstuffs, animal feed and day-old chicks.

Relations have shown a good improvement in the fields of cultural exchanges, agriculture and health. An Egyptian folk troupe took part in the Tel Aviv Festival of 25 April, each capital has held an art exhibition by the other's painters, and youth delegations have exchanged visits. A health delegation from Israel visited Egypt and may provide help to the pharmaceutical industry there, while Israeli farmers are already engaged in a joint project in the Nile Delta.

In tourism, some rancour exists on both sides, although advances have been made. Tourists can now travel overland by bus or fly between the two countries and 55,000 Israelis visited Egypt between the end of 1979 and March 1982. Officials realise though that the Egyptians are comparatively poor and tend to travel either to Saudi Arabia on pilgrimages, to Paris or London for medical treatment, or to other Arab countries on family visits.

Cairo officials suggest that an immediate improvement in travel by Egyptian Christian (Copts) to Jerusalem probably would be noticed if Israel returned a church in the city to the control of the Copts who lost it to the Ethiopian Church in 1967.

It is over Sinai that most of the problems seem to arise. Tourists, including Israelis, are expected to cash $150 into Egyptian currency at the border, which the Israelis claim is too much for a family planning to spend a few days camping on the beach.

Egypt says the rule applies to all tourists and that Israeli visitors cannot have special treatment. Egypt has agreed to special visa arrangements at the border for short-term visitors from Israel, but refuses to allow them to bring four-wheel drive cars into the desert on security grounds.

Egypt bought tourist facilities valued at $25m from Israel and hopes to encourage the flow of Israelis into Sinai. Both tourist buses and trucks are now allowed to drive straight through from Tel Aviv to Cairo.

Only one dispute remains in the area following the withdrawal. This involves a tourist hotel at Taba, built by the Israelis on about one 1km. of land which has been in dispute since the border was agreed by Egypt, Britain and Turkey in 1906. Both countries have claimed the land, and neither will budge.

Egypt has now suggested that the dispute go to arbitration under the Camp David treaty, where a decision will be binding, but Israel wants to submit the decision to conciliation, where a decision is not binding. Talks will start shortly on the issue.

The agreement on oil between the two countries under which Egypt supplies Israel with 40,000 barrels a day, possibly as much as 21 per cent of Israel's consumption — which is not disclosed — seems to be working well. The agreement suits both sides of course, giving Egypt a secure market at a time of glut, and Israel a secure supply.

Relations are always likely to be a problem between the two countries, if only because they want different things from each other. Israel wants what Egypt would call a «special» relationship with its only friendly neighbour, whereas Egypt would be happy with a «normal» more low-key relationship.

Assassination of President Sadat

President Anwar el Sadat of Egypt was assassinated on Oct. 6 1981 in an attack mounted during a military parade in Cairo by an army officer and three other men who were later found to be members of the country's Islamic fundamentalist movement.

The attack on President Sadat took place shortly before 1p.m. local time on Oct. 6 during the military parade held annually to mark the opening Egyptian offensive in the 1973 Arab-Israeli war. As Egyptian Air Force jets were flying over the parade ground, a lorry in the ground procession stopped in front of the presidential rostrum, apparently because of mechanical failure. Armed men then emerged from the lorry and approached the rostrum, throwing grenades and firing with automatic weapons. The President was hit almost immediately and seven others were also killed or fatally wounded, while 29 people were injured, some seriously.

Immediately after the attack President Sadat was flown by helicopter to the Maadi military hospital in southern Cairo and was pronounced dead at 2.40p.m., although the official announcement of his death was not broadcast until four hours later.

According to the Egyptian authorities, the assassination of President Sadat had been intended as the prelude to an Iranian-style Islamic revolution in Egypt and the installation of Prof. Rahman as the «Egyptian Khomeini».

Immediately after the assassination, the Egyptian security authorities mounted a large scale operation against suspected dissidents, particularly members of Islamic fundamentalist organisations. By early November over 700 people were officially stated to have been arrested, although unofficial estimates put the number considerably higher. Suspected fundamentalist sympathisers were also purged from the armed forces.

President Hosni Mubarak

In accordance with the Egyptian Constitution, effective political power passed to Vice-President Hosni Mubarak, who was nominated as President by the People's Assembly on Oct. 6. He was sworn in as Head of the State on Oct. 14. In his inaugural address he pledged to continue all aspects of President Sadat's domestic and international policies, including the peace process with Israel.

Economic performance

After improved performance in 1980 the Egyptian economy faced difficulties in 1981 as the rates of growth of two of its chief sources of income — petroleum production and remittances from Egyptians working abroad — stackened severely. An anticipated fall in oil revenue from nearly $3,000 million in 1980 to just over $2,000 million in 1980-81 was expected to reduce the balance of payments from a surplus of $1,500 million in 1980 to a position of breaking even in 1980-81 and a deficit in 1981-82. (When Dr. Abdel Méguid was appointed Finance Minister in May 1980 the financial year was altered from Jan. 1-Dec. 31 to July 1-June 30). Revenue provided by the Suez Canal, by contrast, rose from $940,000,000 in 1980 to an estimated $1,600 million in 1981.

In his speeches on economic planning President Mubarak laid particular emphasis on the need for an improved blance between food production and population growth. Agricultural output rose by an annual average of 4 per cent in 1978-80 whereas consumption rose by 7 per cent in 1980; although the land reclamation programme regained 31,000 acres of cultivable land per year the population was expected to rise from 43,000,000 to 70,000,000 by the year 2000 and to double that figure in the succeeding 25 years. Furthermore some of the existing cultivable land surrounding cities was being settled by immigrants from rural areas, and the building of the Aswan High Dam had reduced the quantity of soil brought into the Nile from the African heartlands; moreover, according to a report in the Guardian (Jan. 3, 1982), the top soil which continued to reach Egypt was often being used to build mud houses in the villages.

Egypt-sudan (signing of charter of integration)

President Jaafar Mohammed al-Nemery of Sudan and Hosni Mubarak of Egypt signed a charter of integration between their two countries in Khartoum (Sudan) on Oct. 12 1982. The Charter was to last for a 10-year trial period and provided for political and economic integration and close co-ordination in foreign policy, security and development.

The objectives of the Charter were(i) to ensure equal treatment for citizens of both countries; (ii) to work out a detailed strategy for economic integration; (iii) to elaborate an integrated legislative framework and remove legal obstacles to pave the road for common legislation; (iv) to strengthen popular ties between the two countries through intensive meetings between their popular and mass organisations; (v) to base integration action on the values of the Islamic, Arab and African civilisation as well as on the principles of the successive revolutions establishing the present Egyptian and Sudanese states; and (vi) to establish an organisational structure for the institutions of integration. It was stated in conclusion that the provisions of the Charter would not be prejudicial to the rights and duties resulting from the agreements concluded between the two countries previously and that the Charter would enter into force as soon as it had been signed.

The Charter prescribed the establishment of three institutions for the direction and administration of the process of integration as follows:

(1) The Higher Council for Integration, chaired by the two Presidents would deal with económic, political, military, social and cultural policies. The Council would approve projects which would then be submitted for endorsement by the Nile Valley Parliament and which would be financed by the Joint Fund.

(2) The Nile Valley Parliament, comprising sixty members (20 deputies from each of the two legislatures, including the current Speakers, and 10 appointed by each President), would meet twice a year from December 1982 alternately in Khartoum and Cairo. The Parliament would submit its recommendations to the Higher Council and then to the Egyptian and Sudanese People's Assemblies if legislation were required.

(3) The Joint Fund, which would receive initial contributions from each of the two Governments, would have financial and administrative independence and its budget would be approved by the Nile Valley Parliament. (According to a report published in «The Financial Times» on Oct. 12, it was hoped, especially in Egypt, that «the Arabs might be willing to channel money to a joint fund they would otherwise not lend either to Sudan alone, because of fears of mismanagement, nor to Egypt, because of its peace treaty with Israel».)

Egypt's new Constitution, drafted by the People's Assembly on the instructions of President Sadat on May 20, 1972, was revised and completed by the President and the Central Committee of the Arab Socialist Union on September 9, 1972. In its 193 articles the Constitution - the first to be given to Egypt since the 1952 Revolution, and replacing the provisional Constitution of March 1964 - incorporated many of President Sadat's promises to restrict the powers of the country's Security Forces, to guarantee the rule of law and to safeguard the freedom of individual citizens. Providing for equal personal and political rights for men and women, the new Constitution includes the following provisions.

The State «The Arab Republic of Egypt is a democratic and socialist State based on the alliance of the working forces of the people. The Egyptian people forms a part of the Arab nation and works towards its complete unity». (Article 1)

«Islam is the religion of the State and Arabic its official language. The principles of Islamic legislation constitute the essential source of the law». (Article 2)

«Sovereignty is vested in the people..., and the alliance of the working forces of the people... constitutes the Arab Socialist Union, which shall be authority representing the people». (Article 3)

The Head of State, His Duties & Powers

«The President of the Republic is the Head of State... He shall safeguard the affirmation of the sovereignty of the people and of the law..., protect national unity and socialist achievement, coordinate the action of the various public bodies... and, in case of danger to national unity, have the right to take urgent measures», which, however, would have to be approved by the People's Assembly within fourteen days. (Article 73)

The People's Assembly would, at the request of a least one third of its members, nominate a presidential candidate for approval by the electorate. If the candidature was then approved by at least two thirds of the Assembly's members it would have to be ratified by an absolute majority of the people.

The President would be elected for six year and might be reelected. He might be subjected to prosecution only upon a proposal by at least one-third of the Assembly's members.

The Head of State, as «holder of the Executive power» would lay down State policy (Article 139); would appoint one or more Vice-Presidents and have power to dismiss them (Article 141); would appoint the Prime Minister, Vice-Premier, Ministers and Vice-Ministers, and have powers to discharge them (Article 141); and would have the right to convene the Cabinet and attend its meetings (Article 42). He would appoint and dismiss civil and military officials, and diplomatic representatives (Article 143); promulgate legal and police regulations (Article 144-145), as well as decrees on the setting up and organisation of the public services (Article 146); and if necessary declare a state of emergency, subject to approval by the People's Assembly within 30 days (Article 148).

The President would also be C-in-C of the armed forces and might declare war with the approval of the Assembly (Article 150), conclude treaties (Article 151), and consult the people by means of a referendum (Article 152). Upon a proposal by at least one-fifth, and approval by at least two-thirds, of the Assembly's membership, the President might ask for Ministers to be subjected to prosecution.

The People's Assembly

This would comprise 350 elected members and 10 nominated by the President. Each constituency would elect two deputies, the first one to be a worker (in urban constituencies) or a peasant (in rural ones) and the second to be drawn from and represent the other population groups. All candidates for the elective seats would have to be members of the Arab Socialist Union and would have to be approved by the Minister of the Interior, whoc could reject, certain specified categories of people, but there would be no restrictions on the number of candidates contesting each seat.

In addition to its above-mentioned powers, the Assembly would deal with legislation and, in the case of a Presidential veto of a Bill passed by it, could override this by a two-thirds majority. The President might dissolve the Assembly «in case of need» and following a popular referendum (Article 136).

Civil Rights

Article 41-57 of the Constitution guarantee freedom of the individual, of private life, of opinion and of the press.

Amendments of May 1980

The following amendments to the 1972 Constitution were effected in May 1980 and overwhelmingly approved (98.96 percent) by referendum:

a - abolition of the restriction on a President serving more than two terms;

b - creation of a 210-member «maglis El-Shoura» or Consultative Council;

c - adoption of the «sharia» or law of Islam;

d - dissolution of the Arab Socialist Union.

POLITICAL PARTIES

- National Democratic Party (NDP) founded in August 1979 by Egyptian President Sadat; vice-president of NDP: Gen. Mohamed Hosni Mubarek; secretary-general: Fikri Makram Ebeid.
- Socialist Labour Party (SLP) Founded in August 1978 by Mr. Shukri, then Minister of Land Reclamation.
- New Wafd Party re-established in February 1978 under the leadership of Fuad Serageddin. Dissolved itself in June of the same year by unanimous approval of 500 of its members to protest against «legislation which sanctions a political clampdown on the citizens» as alleged by the Wafd communiqué.
- National Progressive Unionist Party (NPUP) led by Khaled Mohiedin (left-wing). Suspended its activities since June 5 1978.

The Courts of Law in Egypt are divided into four categories:

1- The Supreme Court is the higher Court of Law and its jurisdiction covers the whole territory of the Arab Republic of Egypt. Final judgements rendered in criminal and civil matters may be referred to the Supreme Court in cases of misapplications or misinterpretations of the law.

2- Court of Appeal operates in six major governorates, namely: Cairo, Alexandria, Asiyut, Mansurah, Tantah and Beni Suef.

3- Primary Tribunals (each containing several chambers) also sit as Courts of Appeal in certain cases.

4- Summary Proceedings Tribunals are branches of the Primary Tribunals, and are competent to deal with civil and criminal matters of minor importance.

5- The Public Prosecution is headed by the Attorney-General, and consists of a large number of Attorneys, Chief Prosecutors and assistants.

THE OIL INDUSTRY

The oil industry in the Arab Republic of Egypt ranks prominently in the country's national economy following significant developments over the last two decades. Between 1969 and 1979 crude oil production grew apace, moving from 17.1 million metric tons to 25.5 million.

Implementing Egypt's petroleum development programme is the Egyptian General Petroleum Corporation (EGPC) which has sole rights to import and export crude oil and products. The Corporation coordinates petroleum activities through its ownership in the following companies:

1- General Petroleum Company (100% owned) formed in 1957 to undertake exploration and production.

2- Gulf of Suez Petroleum Company (GUPCO), formed in 1966 as a joint venture between EGPC (50%) and Amoco (50%) for operation in the Western Deset. EGPC holding is now 85%, leaving 15% to Amoco.

3- Western Desert Operating Petroleum Company (WEPCO), formed in 1967 as limited partnership between EGPC (50%) and Phillips Petroleum Company (50%).

4- Amoco (Egypt) Oil Company. In 1969, the Company was granted two concessions respectively in the Western Desert and the Nile Valley aggregating 28,000 km2 in area.

Current Oil price

Egypt, which is not a member of OPEC and was expelled from OAPEC (the Arab equivalent), basically sells its oil for what the market will bear and reserves the right to review prices at least every quarter. At the end of 1979 it pressed for 40 dollars a barrel but was forced to accept the current price of 34 dollars.

Natural Gaz

Egypt is trying to expand the use of natural gas. The South Korean company Dailem is now (1980) constructing facilities to collect up to 120m cu ft a day of oil related gas from the GUPCO fields at Ras Shuquair, to be separated and sent to Suez. The World Bank has lent about 85 million dollars towards the project.

Gas exploration is concentrated in the Nile Delta, where 15 or 16 wells are to be drilled, and the Western Desert where 12 wells are to be sunk by 1983.

Egypt has developed a production- sharing agreement, to be put into effect only when it is satisfied that gas reserves put at 4 trillion cu. ft in 1980 have reached 12 trillion cu. ft. (an estimate of Egypt's requirements up to the year 2010). Up to that level, companies will be compensated for discoveries.

Oil Production and Revenues

Egyptian production of crude petroleum, principally from the Sinai oilfields returned to Egypt under the second disengagement agreement with Israel, and the March1979 peace treaty rose to a level of about700,000 barrels per day (equivalent to 35,000,000 tonnes a year) by the end of 1980, over half of this production being exported.

Oil export revenues reached nearly 3,000 million US dollars in 1980 (compared with 1,800 million US dollars in 1979), making a major contribution to a balance of payments surplus of 1,500 million US dollars in 1980 and a doubling of foreign exchange reserves to over 1,000 million by the end of the year.

CODE OF INVESTMENTS

Egypt's approach to the role of foreign capital in its investment and development strategy has undergone a series of changes since 1971. Its first aim was to attract Arab Capital. Gradually, however, a new policy evolved. The Egyptian private sector was encouraged to greater participation in the economic development of the country, and large commitments of Western capital and technological skills were invited to assist in the launching of new export industries and services. Contributions from Egypt's wealthy Arab oil-producing neighbours were used for the development of infrastructure, for reconstruction efforts, and for general budget support.

As Egypt's economic policy unfolded between 1971 and 1975, it included liberalising measures such as the reduction of government controls, new trading and exchange policies, and continuing attempts to increase the efficiency of the public sector. These were accompanied by concerted effort to resume economic ties with Western countries and major Western financial organisations such as the International Monetary Fund and the World Bank, among others.

By 1974, Egypt's development policy had evolved into a triangular concept that combined Egyptian human and material resources, Western capital and technology, and large scale Arab financing. The new large scale Arab financing. The new policy was described officially the «Open Door» policy.

Law 43 of 1974

The new trend toward attracting foreign capital was codified in Law 43 of 1974. Known as the Law for Arab and Foreign Capital Investment and the Free Zones, it was authorised by the Egyptian President on June 19, 1974.

Law 43 extends Egypt's invitation to all foreign capital and expands the privileges granted to foreign investors. It applies to all projects and ventures approved by the General Authority for Arab and Foreign Investments and Free Zones (The Authority), a unit of the Egyptian Ministry of Economy and Economic Cooperation.

According to the Egyptian Government, the basic objective of investments under Law 43 is to secure capital that will contribute to the development of the Egyptian economy. This translates into establishing projects and investments that increase foreign exchange revenues through exports orthat contribute to the country's foreign exchange position through import substitution or the introduction of new productivity-increasing technology.

Law 43 explicitly stipulates that projects under its provisions cannot be nationalised or confiscated and that their assets may not be seized or sequestrated except by judicial procedures and litigation, not through politically motivated actions. This assurance is reinforced by a number of bilateral agreements between Egypt and foreign countries that protect the investments of each country.

The law also stipulates that disputes between Egypt and foreign investors, should they arise, are to be settled either as agreed to with the investor in the contracts signed upon the establishment of a venture, or within the framework of bilateral agreements between Egypt and the investor's country. Other means of settling disputes, according to the law, include the Convention for the Settlement of Investment Disputes, to which Egypt has belonged since 1971, or arbitration by a board selected by the disputing parties.

Companies established under Law 43 are considered private sector enterprises even if the public sector is the joint-venture partner. They are thus exempt from Egyptian laws requiring the election of workers to boards of directors. Nevertheless, some arangement concerning worker participation must be worked into the company's by-laws.

Unless the social security benefits of the new joint-venture company exceed those provided by the Egyptian Social Insurance Law, employees of approved projects must be granted the social security benefits guaranteed by the Egyptian law.

Companies formed under Law 43 are exempt from the provisions of Law 26 of 1954, which stipulates that 5 percent of a company's profits must be invested in government bonds and 25 per cent distributed to workers. But, in accordance with article 26 of the Egyptian Constitution, some percentage of the profits must be distributed to workers, the rate left to the decision of each company's board of directors.

Although joint ventures are also exempted from regulations requiring that the majority of boards of directors be made up Egyptians, at least 90 per cent of the workers of each project must be Egyptian nationals whose aggregate remuneration must account for at least 80 per cent of the total wages paid. At least 75 per cent of the clerical staff must also be Egyptian. Foreign experts engaged in projects under Law 43 can transfer 50 per cent of their salaries abroad.

Joint-Venture companies may maintain a foreign exchange account in bank registered with the Egyptian Central Bank, and they may freely use funds in these accounts for their business transactions.

Joint-venture companies formed under Law 43 are permitted to import free of custom duties whatever machinery, equipment, spare parts, transportation equipment, and other material related to their approved project.

Tax Exemption

Through the extension of five-to-eight year tax holidays to projects approved by the Authority for Foreign Investments, Law 43 provides built-in incentives. The Exemption period, as stated in the Law, begins «from the first tax year following commencement of production or engagement in activities, as the case may be». One of the proposed amendments, now under consideration, extends the tax holiday to a maximum of 15 years and favour reconstruction and development-oriented projects for the more generous benefits.

THE FIVE-YEAR PLAN

The new Five-Year Plan (1980-1984) envisages investment of LE. 20 billion (28.5 billion dollars) with an annual growth rate of 10 per cent.

During this period, although the contribution of agriculture is expected to decline from 25.4 per cent in 1979 to 18.3 per cent in 1984 and be overtaken by oil and its products, which will rise some 16.5 to 18.4 per cent- there is to be greater concentration than before on agriculture.

Average annual growth rates between 1980-1984 read as follows: Suez Canal (16.7%) -Petroleum (12.8%) -Housing & Utilities (12.5%)- Transport & Communication (11.7%) -Construction (11.7%)- Trade & Finance (11.0%) -Industry & Mining (10.8%) - Power (10.3 %)- Agriculture (3.2%).

GDP at factor price estimated at LE. 11,257 million in 1980 is expected to rise to LE. 16,475 million by the end of 1984.

Iraq (444,442 Sq. Km) is bordered on the north by Turkey, on the east by Iran, on the south and southwest by the Arabian Gulf, Kuwait and Saudi Arabia, on the west by Jordan and on the northwest by Syria.

By its topography, Iraq is divided into three distinct geographical zones: the desert in the west and southwest, the plains, and the highlands of Kurdistan in the northeast which rise to well over 10.000 feet.

The desert zone is an upland region with altitudes varying from 2 to 3,000 feet, declining gently towards the Euphrates river.

From earliest times to the present day, the peoples of Iraq have had to construct irrigation works and dams to control the great rivers and the recurrent floods; for both the Euphrates and the Tigris often changed their courses and abandoned channels combined with frequent floods to complicate their control.

Today's flood control policy is based on the following four projects:

1- The barrage at Samara, which has a potential storage capacity of 30 milliard cubic meters.

2- The Dokan Dam - storage capacity = 6,300 million cubic meters.

3- The Derbenki Khan Dam-storage capacity = 3,250 million cubic meters.

4- The Habbaniyah Reservoir

Economically the richest, the plains area is dominated by the river systems of the Tigris and Euphrates. At Qarmal Ali, just above Basra, the two rivers combine and form the Shatt al Arab, a broad navigable waterway through which ocean-going vessels enter the harbour of Basra.

For thousands of years these rivers have been the source of both life and misery for their riverain inhabitants. Even today all the large towns are on the rivers, for until the arrival of the railway and the lorry, the only way to carry goods in bulk was by water. From Ramadi and Samarra southwards in the flat alluvial plain that makes country's land surface, agriculture depends on irrigation from the rivers. The traveller who arrives at Baghdad by air at any season except spring sees little to relieve the flat monotony of the dusty landscape except the Tigris, meandering in extravagant loops to the horizon. Over most of its length the bare cracked desert comes right to the bank. There is no strip of bright green, as there is along the Nile in Egypt.

Climate

Iraq's climate is sub-tropical.

In Baghdad and in most inland areas the heat is dry and the nights comparatively cool, but in Basra the humidity is generally high throughout the summer and the nights are hot.

Population

There are important racial and cultural distinctions among the population of Iraq, with the major difference between the Arabs and the Kurds. The Arabs are a markedly homogenous group, and occupy most of the centre, west and south of Iraq. The Kurds are racially akin to the Iranians, and form another, smaller homogenous group located mainly in the north and east. Until 1948, Iraq had a significant Jewish community, living mainly in the towns.

Principals Cities & Towns

Baghdad is the capital of Iraq and its largest city. It is situated on the Tigris about 275 miles from Basra. The population is estimated at around 2.8 million, predominantly Arab Muslim with sizeable Christian and Kurdish minorities.

Basra (population approximately 900,000) is situated on the Shatt-al-Arab in the date growing region of south Iraq. It is Iraq's second largest city and its only general port.

Mossul (population approximately 850,000) lies on the Tigris about 250 miles north of Baghdad, in an agriculturally rich region (cereals and livestock) which depends mainly on natural rainfall.

Kirkuk (population approximately 300,000) lies 190 miles north of Baghdad, and south east of Mossul, in the main oil producing area of Iraq.

Suleimaniya (population approximately 227,000) is about 250 miles north-east of Baghdad in the mountainous and principally Kurdish region.

Kut (population approximately 203,000) lies 120 miles south of Baghdad on the Tigris. It is a grain centre which also boasts a poultry project, fish breeding farm and textile factories.

Public Holidays (1983)

New Year's Day (1 January); Army Day (6 January); Mouled el Nabi (Birthday of the Prophet) (30 January); Now Ruz (Spring Festival) (21 March); Anniversary of founding Arab Baath Socialist Party (7 April); Labour Day (1 May); Republic Day & 1st day of Ramadan (14 July); National Day (1968 Revolution) (17 July); Id el Fitr (10 July); Id al Adha (feast of the Sacrifice) (16 Sept.); Muslim New Year (7 October).

Administration

Administratively, Iraq is divided into Liwas or departments, each of which is governed by a Mutasarrif. The 14 Liwas are listed here:

Liwas	Area (in sq. km.)
Amara	17,945
Arbil	15,315
Baghdad	19,922
Basra	18,022
Diyala	15,742
Diwaniya	83,343
Hilla	6,889
Karbala	7,170
Kirkuk	19,543
Kut	14,814
Mossul	50,881
Nassiriyah	14,452
Ramadi	137,969
Sulaimaniya	11,993

Language

Arabic, the official language is the most widely spoken. Kurdish and Turkish dialects are common in the north.

Religion

The majority of the Arab population are Shi'ah Muslims as are 60% of the Kurds. There are also small Christian groups, who live mainly in the north, round Mossul, or in the larger towns.

HISTORY

Before the 6th. Century different communities had inhabited the country like the Hittites, the Persians, the Babylonians, the Romans. Early in the 6th. Century Arabs began the conquest of Iraq. In 641 Basra and Al Koofa became two great garrison cities on which Muslim rule in Iraq was established. In 750, Abbasid dynasty took the place of the Ummayad dynasty. In 809 Haroun ar-Rachid dies and Civil War breaks out between his two sons, one of them Mamun wins and becomes the ruler of Iraq in 813. In 1258, a grandson of Jenghis Kan brings with him great devastation.

After the first world war England gets a mandate from the League of Nations up to 1932 when Iraq was granted her independence and as an independent power joins the League of Nations. In 1955, a pact was formed between Turkey, Iran, Iraq and England called the Pact of Baghdad.

On 14 July 1958 the Republic of Iraq was declared by a group of army Officers after a coup d'état in which the reigning King Faisal II and his uncle, the ex-Regent the Emir Abul Illah, and the Prime Minister, lost their lives. For the next 4 years the country was under the control of General Kassim, who was executed on February 9, 1963. The Baath Party takes over for a little while and is in turn overthrown by Marshall Abdusslam Muhammad Aref.

Under Aref, who initiated a policy of closer relations with Egypt, martial law, in force since 1958, was brought to an end in January 1965, and a purely civilian Government was inaugurated. In March 1966, President Aref was killed in an air accident, and was succeeded by his brother Abdul Rahman Mohammed Aref whose presidency was abruptly terminated by the Baath Party in 1968. General Hassan al Bakr, a former Prime Minister, then assumed power both as President and Prime Minister.

The new regime adopted stiffer policies at home and abroad; fighting was resumed against the Kurdish rebels in the northeast.

Relations with Iran deteriorated since Aprill 1969 following a dispute over the Shatt-el-Arab waterway which forms the frontier; Iran was further accused of complicity in an abortive coup in Baghdad in January 1970.

The Kurdish war virtually ended in March 1970, the Kurds were granted autonomy, and five Kurdish ministers were invited to join the Baghdad cabinet.

Iraqi armed forces attack Iran

Following a series of border skirmishes in late September 1980, Iraqi armour and ground forces moved into Iran attacking Iranian border posts with heavy mortar fire. Because there had been no formal declaration of war, most military experts thought that hostilities between the two countries would flare out within days.

As the Iraqi troops penetrated deeper into enemy territory they met with increasingly stiff resistance, notably outside several Iranian cities. The invaders fought at close quarters in the port city of Khoramshahr, shelled the big refinery at Abadan (admittedly the world's largest) and launched a devastating barrage of Soviet-made missiles at the towns of Dezful and Andimeshk.

The Iraqi drive was aimed at three principal targets: the oil refinery centre of Abadan, Khuzistan's capital of Ahwaz and the important communications junction of Dezful, 150 miles north of Khoramshahr.

Iran fought back with concentrated air raids on Baghdad, Kurkuk, Mosul and a number of industrial installations, including the nuclear station under construction with French technical assistance.

Iraqi warplanes retaliated by bombing several factories on the edge of Tehran International Airport, a refinery at Tabriz and the oil-loading terminal at Kharg Island.

But for all the bitter fighting, neither side could land a killing blow, although by mid-October both Abadan and Khoranshahr were totally encircled and virtually in Iraqi hands.

However, by September 1981 the front line created by the Iraqi advance into Iranian territory had been pushed back by upto 25 miles, when Iranian forces lifted the siege of Abadan and went on to launch a new military offensive, capturing the town of Bostan in November. Although by early 1982 the conflict seemed to have reached a stalemate, the military initiative subsequently appeared to pass to Iran, which responded to a series of Iraqi counter-attacks in February 1982 by launching a further major offensive in mid-March, which by mid-May had succeeded in driving the Iraqi forces back to the border.

POLITICAL PARTIES

Arab Baath Socialist Party - founded in Damascus in 1947, and has been Iraq's ruling party since 1968.

National Progressive Party — founded in 1973; combines Baath and Communist aspirations.

Iraqi Communist Party — founded in 1934.

Kurdistan Democratic Patry - founded in 1946.

Kurdistan Revolutionary Party - founded in 1972.

Political Parties were outlawed with the overthrow of the monarchy in 1958. After the overthrow of Kassem in 1963 by supporters of the Baath, Iraq became a one-party state.

In 1970 the Kurdistan Democratic Party was authorised to operate, primarily in the north. While the country is actually governed more by the armed forces than by the party, members of the baath have nevertheless penetrated the armed forces. Nominally all governing institutions espouse the Baath ideology which includes socialism and a Pan-Arab ideal.

Theoretically, Iraq has an independent judiciary, which combines French, Islamic, and revolutionary elements. The system is supervised by a Judicial Council, headed by the Minister of Justice. There are three types of jurisdiction with corresponding court systems-the civil, religious, and special courts.

Civil courts deal with civil litigation, as well as all criminal cases. The courts of sessions hear serious criminal cases and serve as appellate courts in all criminal cases. Judgments in civil cases are appealed to the courts of appeal. The Court of Cassation is the highest court of the land and has original jurisdiction in crimes committed by public officials.

Each of the religious communities has its own religious court, which is governed by its respective religious law and which deals with all questions of personal status, marriage, and inheritance.

Special courts were formed in pursuance of the National Security Act of 1965. They have original jurisdiction in all cases involving state security. Usually the majority of the judges are military officers.

THE ECONOMY

Government strategy is to develop a balanced economy based on the oil, industrial and agricultural sectors. The 1978 allocations within the 1976/80 development plan therefore placed reduced emphasis on the industrial sector and stressed the development of both infrastructure and agriculture. Additions to the infrastructure are proceeding rapidly with large-scale projects for improved roads ports, railways and telecommunications and for better health, educational and housing facilities. Progress in the agricultural sector, though less impressive, still continue to be significant. However, the oil sector remains the nation's major source of income accounting for approximately 85% of Government revenues and 98% of export earnings.

Agriculture

According to government figures, slightly over 50% of the work force is found in the agricultural sector but this percentage may have fallen substantially in the years 1978 and 1979 as the trend towards urban migration continues. The long term goal is self-sufficiency in food and the production of a surplus for export. Considerable scope apparently exists for the sector's expansion; out of an estimated cultivalble area of 24 million hectares, only about 6 million hectares are currently being farmed and the current five-year plan is allocating $ 3.5 billion for dams and irrigation projects to increase both the size and productivity of areable acreage. The aim is to increase the area of irrigated land by some 4 million hectares. Major irrigation projects include the 255,000 Abu Ghuraib project, the 100,000 hectare Kirkuk project and the Khalis irrigation scheme. In association with these projects a number of dams are planned for Bekhme, Haditha, Hamrin and Mosul. These dams will provide hydroelectric power and flood control. However, because of the long gestation period, these projects will not measurably affect agricultural production for a number of years. In the short term, the Government expects the 7% annual real growth target in the agricultural sector to come from the increased mechanisation of existing production, and substantial increases in livestock, poultry and egg output.

In spite of the priority which is being given to agriculture, Iraq will continue to be heavily reliant on imports of farm produce until at least the mid-1980's. Such imports are currently believed to be in excess of $ 1 billion annually.

Iraqi economic developments

Although the war made heavy demands on the Iraqi economy in terms of its drain on manpower and financial resources, the Iraqi Government expressed its determination to continue to implement its development plans. This policy aim required considerable foreign finance, which was supplied by Saudi Arabia, Kuwait, Qatar and the United Arab Emirates and welcomed by Iraq despite its current disagreement with Saudi Arabia in particular over oil-pricing policy.

At the end of April 1981 Kuwait approved a 10-year interest-free loan of $2,000 to Iraq, and other loans granted in 1981 included one of $ 5,000 million from Saudi Arabia, a further $ 1,500 million from Kuwait and $ 1,500 million from the UAE and Qatar; total financial assistance from the Gulf during the year was estimated at $ 14,000 million. The INA reported on June 17, 1981, that in the course of the war to date contracts worth 800,000,000 dinars ($ 2,700 million) had been signed, principally for infrastructure projects. In the first six months of 1981 a total of $ 15,000 million was spent by the Government on development projects compared with a total of $ 12,500 million for the whole of 1980.

Projects in progress in 1981 included in particular the $ 3,000 million expressway linking Baghdad to Basra and to the border with Jordan, the $ 2,000 million Baghdad-Basra railway and the $ 1,500 million Mosul dam. In the new 1981-85 five-year plan the emphasis was placed on industrial projects, notably the manufacture of petrochemicals, fertilizers and construction materials.

Effects of war on oil production

Iraq's chief source of foreign exchange, namely oil production, was severely affected by the war, and by early 1982 production was reckoned at about 1,000,000 bpd compared with a pre-war figure of 3,500,000 bpd. (Over the same period foreign exchange reserves were estimated to have fallen from $ 35,000 million to $ 9,000 million). Iraq's Deputy Oil Minister, Mr. Abdul Munim al Samarrai, disclosed on March 4, 1982, that Iranian military activity has caused considerable damage to Iraqi oil facilities, especially to Kirkuk and Basra, and that exports were currently running at about 900,000 bpd. He also said that Iraq hoped to "persuade our Saudi brothers of the negative effects of what they are doing" (i.e. in holding down the currently depressed price of oil on the international market).

OIL

For over 40 years, from the granting of the first oil concession in 1920, oil operations in Iraq had been dominated by British, French and Dutch interests which together had formed the Iraq Petroleum Company and its subsidiaries: the Basrah Petroleum Company and the Mosul Petroleum Company. By 1952, these three companies had concession agreements with the Iraqi government which gave them access to the whole of Iraq with the exception of 684 sq. miles near the border with Iran.

On February 8, 1964 Law No. 11 was promulgated establishing the Iraq National Oil Company (INOC). On June 1, 1972, IPC's assets and rights in the Kirkuk, Jumbur and Bai Hassan fields were nationalised and assigned to the Iraqi Company for Oil Operations (ICOO-a State-owned enterprise) which became INOC's subsidiary in 1976. On March 1, 1973, the Mosul Petroleum Company was officially incorporated with ICOO. In October of the same year, the Basrah Petroleum Company was transferred to INOC.

A new provisional Contitution, which took Kurdish claims into account, was promulgated on July 16,1970. This is the fourth to be adopted since the revolution of 1958. The first was promulgated in July 1958; the second in May 1964, the third in September 1968, being amended in November 1969.

The main provisions of the new provisional Constitution read as follows:

1 - Iraq is a democratic republic and Islam is its religion.

2 - The highest authority in the State is the Revolutionary Command Council, consisting of not more than 12 persons chosen from the members of the Iraqi leadership of the «Baath» Party.

3 - The President of the Revolutionary Command Council who must be elected by a two-thirds majority of its members is also the Head of State.

4 - The Vice-President of the Revolutionary Command Council shall act as Head of State in case of absence of sickness of the President.

5- A legislative body called the National Council shall be set up. Its composition and the qualifications required for membership shall be defined by a law to be published later.

6 - The President shall be responsible to the Revolutionary Command Council, and the Vice-President and Ministers to the President, not to the National Council.

7- The Iraqi people consists of two nationalities, Arabs and Kurds, within the «indivisible unity of Iraq», Kurdish and Arabic shall be the official language in the Kurdish region (a).

Increasing modernisation is reflected in changes of emphasis given to different parts of the transport system. Until the mid - 20th century, transport was either by water or by animal. River transport had developed over the centuries to transmit goods and personnel, particularly from central to southern Iraq. The use of animals- camels, horses and horse-drawn carts - complemented this system. Both of these modes are adequate for a traditional economy, but increasing commercialisation and industrialisation and the increasing scale of economic interaction between Iraq and its neighbours brought about fundamental changes.

Roads

There are about 13,000 miles of roads in Iraq, over 30 percent of which are paved. Also, the desert land is sufficiently hard to allow cars, trucks, and buses to travel across it. The most developed parts of the road system are in central, northern and southern Iraq.

Railways

The Iraqi Republican Railways are divided into three main lines radiating from Baghdad:

1. Baghdad - Ma'qil (Basra) Metre Gauge Line, a distance of 569 Kilometres, with branch lines, one at Al-Hindiyah Junction for the holy city of Kerbala (a distance of 38 kms) and the other at Ur-Junction (Ur of the Chaldees) for An-Nassiriyah. The line serves the Liwas of Kerbala, Al-Hilla, Ad-Diwaniyah, Nassiriya and Basra, famous for its world renowned dates. On this line travellers can visit the ancient places of Babylon, Al-Ukhaidher, Eridu (Warka) and Ur of the Chaldees and Holy Shrines at Kerbala.

2. Baghdad-Kirkuk - Erbil Metre gauge line, a distance of 427 kilometres with a branch line at Juloula'Junction, for Khanaqin City, a distance of about 28 kms. The line serves the Liwas of Diyala, Kirkuk and Erbil. On this section travellers can visit the famous oilfields at Kirkuk (Baba Gurgur) and ancient Castle at Erbil.

3. Baghdad - Mossul - Tel Kotchek standard gauge line, a distance of 531 kilometres. The line serves the Liwas of Baghdad and Mossul. On this section travellers can visit Samarrah, the ruins of Hatra, Nirmud, and Ninevah, the famous capital of the Assyrian Empire and other historical places. The Baghdad - Tel Kotchek line offers direct connection to Aleppo, Beirut, Ankara, Istanbul and with the Simplon-Orient Express from Istanbul to Rome, Paris and London via Nice, Belgrade, Zagreb, Trieste and Milan.

Shipping

The port of Basra is the commercial gateway of Iraq. It is connected by various ocean routes with all parts of the world, and constitutes the natural distributing centre for overseas supplies.

The port of Basra has five wharves of reinforced concrete and is provided with modern cargo handling equipment.

GEOGRAPHY

The Hashemite Kingdom of Jordan is bounded on the North by Syria, on the North-East by Iraq, on the East and South by Saudi Arabia, on the West by Israel. Its total area is approximately 96,500 sq. Km. inclusive of the territory West of the Jordan river.

Five well-defined regions can be distinguished. The western uplands, from Janin in the North to Hebron in the South are comparatively well-watered areas around Nablus and Ramallah receiving more than 700 mm. of rainfall. The region grows most of the olives and grapes of the kingdom, in addition to field crops and vegetables.

The other major agricultural region is the eastern unplands from the Irbib plateau South to Madada, where rainfall is lighter and more variable.

Between these two upland regions is the Jordan Valley with an average annual rainfall of less than 200 mm.

The eastern uplands South of Madada constitute the fourth region where altitude ranges between 900 and 1,500 meters. Rainfall is therefore variable, exceeding 300 mm only on two patches of land around Karak and Shaubak.

The remainder of the country lying East of the uplands is a desert plateau sloping away towards Iraq and Saudi Arabia.

As it is, the bulk of the agricultural districts in Jordan lie West of the Hedjaz railway line where the hillsides are terraced, fruit-trees planted and irrigation developed.

Jordan's main towns are: Amman, the capital, seat of Government and business centres (pop. 732, 587 in 1978); Zarka (pop. 269, 780); Irbib (pop. 139,789);

East Bank population was estimated at 2,126,540 in 1978.

Local Administration

The kingdom is divided into ten districts or «Liwa», these in turn divided into sub-districts «Qada», governed by district governors «Muhafez» and sub-district governors «Qaem Makam». In some subdistricts there are in addition «Nahiyas», smaller administrative units, governed by «Mudirs». All these administrative divisions are under the jurisdiction of the Ministry of the Interior. Of the districts Amman, Zarqa, Salt, Irbid, Qarak, Ma'an, Jerusalem, Nablus, Jenin and Hebron, the last four are now under Israeli military occupation.

Religion and Language

Nearly 80 per cent of the population are Sunni Moslems, but the Constitution recognizes freedom of worship and Christian churches of all denominations are allowed to hold religious services.

Among Christians, adherents of the Rum, or Greek Orthodox Church, form a majority. Other Christian groups include the Rum Catholics, or Greek Çatholics, also called the Melkites or Eastern Catholics; the Roman Catholic community, headed by a patriarch appointed by the pope; the Assyrian (East Syrian) or Nestorian church, whose members number about 1,000 and live mostly in Jerusalem and Bethlehem; and the small Syrian Orthodox, or Jacobite Church, who, like the Nestorians, use Syriac in their liturgy. Most non-Arab Christians are Armenians; the majority belong to the Gregorian, or Armenian, Orthodox Church, the rest to the Armenian Catholic Church. There are several protestant denominations representing relatively recently formed communities.

Arabic is the State's official language, but most educated Jordanians speak fluent English.

The country has seen the empires of Egypt, Assyria, and Persia; it has also been the battlefield of the Roman eagles and their Byzantine successors. Within it occurred the birth of Christianity. Jordan is an Arab country. Arabs had been living in this area since before the Christian era, and the Arab conquest of Syria and Palestine in the seventh century A.D. established them as the dominant group. But for the period of the Crusader Kingdom (1099 to 1187), it remained under Arab rule until the beginning of the 16 th century, when all the Middle Eastern countries were conquered by the Turks. In 1916, the Arab Revolt against the Ottoman Rule was led by the late King Hussain of the Hedjaz. After the 1914-18 War, Jordan became part of the Arab Kingdom of Syria with Faisal of Arabia as King. When he was forced to leave Syria in 1920 the Transjordan districts of Ajlun, Amman, Balqa, Karak and Ma'an formed an independent state under British Mandate with the Emir Abdallah, Faisal's brother, at its head. In 1946 Jordan attained independence as a Kingdom, with the Emir Abdallah as its first King. In April 1950 after the end of hostilities between the Jordanian Parliament, representing Central Arab Palestine and Trans-Jordan Proper, approved the union of these two regions, the new Kingdom to be called the Hashemite Kingdom of Jordan, the present King being a grandson of King Abdallah. On July 20, 1915, King Abdallah was assassinated in Jerusalem, and King Talal, whose physical health was unfavourable, abdicated in favour of his son Hussain. The Arab Federation Treaty signed between Iraq and Jordan was formed on February 14, 1958 but had to be dissolved by King Hussain on August 2, following the Coup d'Etat in Iraq and the assassination of its King.

With half of its territory occupied by Israel, Jordan continued in 1968 to cling to survival as an independent State with the help of substantial aid from other Arab countries. But the very possibility remained of an open conflict between the Palestinian refugee commando organizations and King Hussain and his Government, with the threat of the partition of the country or the downfall of the monarchy.

The gurrilla's first serious encounter with the army on February 11-12, 1970 followed Hussain's attempt to assert his authority by forbidding the former to carry weapons in public. This move, openly defied in Amman, unleashed a battle that left at least half the capital in guerrilla hands.

The first six months of 1971, like the closing weeks of 1970, were marked by continued clashes at frequent intervals between the Jordanian Army and the Palestinian guerrilla forces in Jordan. Eventually, the Jordanian Army launched a powerful military offensive in July against the guerrilla forces in northern Jordan-their last stronghold in the country-which was claimed in Amman to have achieved complete success and to have resulted in the destruction of the guerrilla organisation in Jordanian territory.

A number of Arab countries reacted strongly to the destruction of the Palestinian commandos.

King Hussain's awkward position was redressed in 1975. From then on, he travelled abroad widely. He visited Britain, Romania, the United States, Moscow, Australia, Japan, Singapore, Canada, and made extensive tours of the Arab world, both to put over his views on the Palestine question and the Middle East and to drum up financial support for Jordan's economy from the oil-rich states on the Arab side of the Gulf.

Fourth Marriage

On June 15, 1978, the marriage took place in Amman of King Hussain and Miss Elisabeth Halaby (26), the US-born daughter of Mr. Nageeb Halaby, a former president of pan American Airways, whose family was of Lebanese origin.

On becoming King Hussain's fourth wife Miss Halaby who had graduated in architecture from Princeton University, was accorded the title queen of Jordan and would henceforth be Known as Queen Nur.

Relations with Iraq (1980-81).

In the early stages of open warfare between Iran and Iraq, a number of Arab leaders pledged their support for Iraq, with the most unequivocal backing coming from Jordan.

On Oct. 6 the government of Jordan had ordered the mobilisation of all transport vehicles to carry food and other supplies to the Iraqi army. Moreover, it was confirmed in Israel on Oct. 7 that an East European ship had unloaded arms supplies at the Jordanian Red Sea port of Aqaba and that these included anti-aircraft guns which had been immediately sent to Iraq by road.

In an interview published in «Paris-Match» of Oct. 10 King Hussein declared:«If there is anything I can do(for Iraq) I shall not hesitate for a moment, in the same way as we would expect Iraqi support if we were in danger».

Relations with Syria

The deterioration of relations between Syria and Jordan following the outbreak of the Iran-Iraq war brought the two countries close to war in late 1980 and early 1981. In the week prior to an Arab summit conference which opened in Amman on Nov. 25, 1980 and which was boycotted by Algeria, Lebanon, Libya, South Yemen and the Palestine Liberation Organisation, President Assad accused Jordan of maltreating Syrian citizens living on the Syrian-Jordanian border, and Syrian troops moved into the area.

By Nov. 30, 1980 the numbers of troops amassed on the border were reported to be between 20,000 and 30,000 Syrian troops along with 300 tanks, and 12,000 Jordanian troops backed by tanks, artillery and anti-aircraft guns. Total armed strengths were listed variously as between 200,000 and 250,000 for Syria, including 30,000 troops stationed in Lebanon, and between 60,000 and 70,000 for Jordan.

Despite reports that troops of both nations had indeed pulled back, tension continued. Armed conflict again came close after the kidnap on Feb. 6, 1981, of a Jordanian diplomat in Lebanon (Mr Hisham Moheissen), apparently by Syrian guerillas, when his release was made conditional upon the return to Syrial of two pilots that had defected to Jordan. On Feb. 9 Jordan withdrew its ambassador to Damascus and two days later the Syrian ambassador to Amman was recalled. Further friction resulted from the Jordanian revelation on Feb. 25 of an alleged Syrian plot to kill Jordan's Prime Minister, Mr Mudar Badran.

(January 1, 1952 with Amendments

The State and the Government

The Hashemite Kingdom of Jordan is an Arab independent and sovereign State. Its territory is indivisible and no portion of it may be ceded. The Government of the country is a hereditary monarchy, parliamentary in form. Islam is the religion of the State and Arabic its official language. The capital of the Kingdom is the city of Amman, but it may be changed to another locality by a special law.

The rights and duties of the People

No discrimination shall be made between Jordanians as to their rights and obligations, on the grounds of race, language or creed. The State guarantees work and education within the limits of its possibilities. It also guarantees security and equal opportunity to all Jordanians. Personal liberty is safeguarded.

It shall not be lawful to arrest or imprison any person, to deport a Jordanian from the territory of the Kingdom, to prevent him from residing in any place or to impose on him a residence in a given locality, except in cases provided for by the law.

The State protects all creeds and the exercise of religious rites in accordance with the customs observed in the Kingdom unless they offend public order and morality.

The freedom of opinion, of expression of opinion by word of mouth, in writing, in drawing and in any other form is granted to every citizen except in cases of emergency or martial law when a limited censorship may be imposed on newspapers, pamphlets, books and broadcasts in matters relating to public security and national defence.

Work is the right of every citizen, and it is the duty of the Government to provide employment by directing and encouraging national economy. The State protects labour and shall enact legislation to regulate wages, the weekly hours of labour, annual leave with pay and special compensation in cases of dismissal, of illness, old age and accidents.

The Authorities

The Throne of the Hashemite Kingdom of Jordan is hereditary in the family of King Abdallah Ibn-ul-Hussain and shall devolve on his male heirs in direct line through males.

I- The King declares war, concludes peace and international treaties. Treaties of peace, alliance, trade, navigation and treaties involving territorial changes of entrenchment on sovereignty of embodying the general or private right of citizens shall not become executory until they have been ratified by the National Assembly.

The King may grant special Pardon and may reduce sentences. No death sentence shall be executed until it has been confirmed by the King.

II- The Council of Ministers shall comprise the Prime Minister as President and a number of Ministers, determined according to circumstances and need.

The Council of Ministers shall be responsible for the direction of all internal and external affairs of the State, with exception of such affairs as may be delegated to another person or body by the Constitution or by law.

The Prime Minister and his Ministers are collectively responsible to the Chamber of Deputies for the general policy of the State; and every Minister is responsible to the Chamber for the affairs of his Ministry.

III- The National Assembly shall consist of two bodies: the Senate and the Chamber of Deputies. The Senate shall comprise a number of Notables including the President, which shall not exceed one half of the number of Deputies. The term of office in the Senate is eight years. The Chamber of Deputies shall consist of members elected by universal secret and direct suffrage in accordance with the electoral law.

The term of the Chamber of Deputies is four solar years, but the King shall have the right to extend the duration of Parliament by Royal Irada for a period of not less than one year and not more than two years.

Financial matters

No tax or duty shall be imposed except by law. Taxes and duties exclude fees paid into the Treasury in respect of services rendered by Government Departments to individuals or in respect of the use of State property. In imposing taxes the Government shall be guided by the principles of progressive taxation and the realisation of equality and social justice. The tax shall not exceed the ability of the taxpayer.

POLITICAL PARTIES

All political parties are banned.

However, various groupings survive, ranging from the extreme nationalism of the Baath National Front through the nationalist blocs of the National Socialist Party, the Arab Palestine group, the Liberation group and the Muslim Brotherhood. The moderate factions are the Arab Constitutional Group and the Coalition Party which seeks the right to full political activity. Guerrilla action against Israel has produced additional complexity to the present situation and the position of the leading political figures is likely to change.

JUSTICE

The judiciary is constitutionally independent, though judges are appointed and dismissed by royal decree. There are three categories of courts. The first category consists of regular courts, including magistrates courts, courts of first instance, and courts of appeals and cassation in Amman, which hear appeals passed on from lower appeals courts. The constitution also provides for a Special Council, which interprets the laws and passes on their constitutionality. The second category consists of Shari'ah Muslim courts and other religious courts for non-Muslims; these exercise jurisdiction over matters of personal status. The third category consists of special courts, such as land, government, property, municipal, tax, and customs courts.

ECONOMY

The main target of the 1976/80 plan is the development of «productive» sectors of the economy, mainly the mines, but also industries either producing for export or import substitution as well as agriculture.

Among the leading projects are the expansion of phosphate production to 6 million tons by 1982, potash production from the Dead Sea and a superphosphate fertiliser plant, both starting in 1981, which together should bring in additional export income of US $ 500-600 million by 1982/1983. More specialised plans are centred on the home market including the development of a cement works, an oil refinery, new power stations, including a hydroelectric scheme on the Yarmouk river which is to be built during the next five years, the completion by 1985 of an-electric power station at Aqaba and a plant for the desalinisation of sea water. The building of the dam over the Yarmouk will also provide an improved irrigation system distributing water to the North.

Geological research work is continuing in an effort to find fresh sources of supplies of water and oil. Finally, telecommunications, road and rail networks, modernisation of ports and airfields, and the tourist trade are also favoured investment sectors.

The principal aim of the next plan, already under study, is technological development, training the labour force and industrial decentralisation. Jordan's acute labour shortage has recently been alleviated, both by a large inflow of immigrants and by an improvement in salaries and social security which has acted as a brake on Jordanian emigration.

Roads

Jordan has a main, secondary, and rural road network about 4,400 miles long; of this about 3,500 miles are hard-surfaced. This roadway system, maintained by the Ministry of Public Works, link the major cities and towns and also links the kingdom with neighbouring countries. Within cities, towns, and villages, however, the local authorities are responsible for road upkeep. One of the main traffic arteries is the Amman - Jarashar-Ramtha highway, which links Jordan with Syria to the north. The route from Amman via Ma'an to the port of al-'Aqabah is the principal route to the sea. From Ma'an, the Desert Highway passes through al-Mudawwarah, linking Jordan with Saudi Arabia. The Amman-Jerusalem highway, passing through Na'ur, is a major tourist artery.

Railways

In the early sixties Jordan, Saudi Arabia, and Syria reached agreement on the rehabilitation of the Hedjaz Railway which runs between Damascus and Medina and crosses Jordan from north to south. The tripartite arrangement provides that the three countries equally share the total cost which was estimated at JD 8.1 million. Reconstruction work started in February 1964 but was suspended in 1970.

The line between Ma'an and Saudi Arabia is now operational together with a 15-km extension into Saudi Arabia as far as Haret Ammar station.

Since 1975 a 115-km extension to Aqaba, financed by Bonn, is now mainly used for transporting phosphates for export.

Shipping

The Port of Aqaba being Jordan's only outlet to the sea, plans to improve and develop its facilities have all along derived high priority. Present installations include three cargo berths, of which one is exclusively utilised for phosphates, a deep berth, storage facilities for phosphates and other goods, mechanical handling equipment, and power generation. Investment in four new berths and storage facilities are now nearing completion.

Civil Aviation

Alia (Royal Jordan Airline):
Head Office, Prince Hassan Street, Amman. P.O.Box 302. Alia was established in December 1963 with joint ownership between the government and the private sector. The company became completely state-owned as of March 1968 Services throughout the Middle East.

There are three types of schools in Jordan - government schools, private and missionary schools, and the UNRWA schools for refugee children. Schooling consists of six years of elementary, three years of preparatory, and three years of secondary education. The Ministry of Education supervises all schools, establishes the curricula, teachers' qualifications, and state examinations; it also distributes free books to students in government schools and enforces compulsory education to the age of 14. Almost 70 percent of the students attend government schools. In addition to Khadduri Agricultural Training Institute, there are three other agricultural secondary schools in operation, as well as a number of vocational, labour, and social affairs institutes, a Shari'ah (Qur'anic) seminary, and nursing, military, and teachers' colleges.

Kuwait is situated on the northwestern shore of the Arabian Gulf, being the most northerly, the largest and the most populous of the Arab Shaikhdoms and communities of the area.

It is bounded on the east by the Gulf, on the north and west by Iraq and on the south west by Saudi Arabia. To the South, Kuwait and Saudi Arabia jointly also borders the Gulf. The area of the State proper is approximately 6,000 square miles, or somewhat less than that of New Jersey or Wales. The country is roughly rectangular in shape, 130 miles East to West and with a maximum North-South dimension of about 115 miles. The State includes a number of offshore islands the larger of which are Budiyan, Failakah, and Warbah. Only Failakah, the site of an ancient Greek Temple built by Alexander's forces, is permanently inhabited. Kuwait bay is the only prominent coastal feature. It indents the shoreline about 25 miles and provides protection for the port of Kuwait. Half of the shoreline of the country lies on Kuwait Bay, Kuwait City and its immediate environs, plus the oil town of Ahmadi and adjacent Fahaheel a few miles of the south, contain all but a few thousand of the State's population, numbering 1,355,827 in May 1980. Apart from a small Bedouin population and oil field workers. the Neutral Zone is uninhabited.

Kuwait's climate and physical aspect are, of course, typical of the region. Mean annual rainfall is 4 to 5 inches and average daytime summer temperatures well exceed 110 degrees F. The entire area is semi-arid to arid. There are no springs or streams on the surface. Scarcity of fresh water is thus the major physical problem. The only usable water, in addition to that distilled from the sea, is found trapped in sub-surface sedimentary beds.

Public holidays (1983)

Mulid al Nabi- birthday of the Prophet (16 December); Eid al Fitr, end of Ramadan (11-13 July); Eid al Adha, Feast of the Sacrifice (17-20 September); Muslim New Year (7 October); Ashura, day of mourning for Shi'ite Muslims (16 October).

Language & Religion

The official language is Arabic; English is used as a second language.

Islam is the religion of the State, but there is a number of Christian churches of various denominations (Anglicans, Roman Catholics, Armenian, Greek, Coptic and Syrian Orthodox churches).

Recent archeological investigations undertaken on the island of Failakah have shown that Kuwait's history as a centre of trade and commerce extends back into the 3rd millenium before Christ.

The island of Failakah is located about 32 kms. north-east of Kuwait City, and has been host since 1958 to Danish archeologists who have unearthed a number of temples, fortresses, residential quarters, seals, statues and inscriptions. These show that Failakah during the Bronze Age, had trade relations with many other countries and possessed a high level of technical achievement in building and domestic crafts. It is the opinion of some that Failakah is one of the possible sites of the «Dilmun» culture, often mentioned in Sumerian inscriptions.

At other sites which have yet to be fully excavated, some buildings and fully furnished rooms of this period (2500 NC.) have already been brought to light. Many of these discoveries are related to what has been found on Bahrain, further down the Gulf. The most unusual find had been over 410 almost perfectly round seals, which also differ considerably in subject matter from the cylinder seals to be found in Iraq.

The Greek Period

In Tall Said, one of three primary archeological sites on the island, the excavations have uncovered the Greek period of the island's history. During Alexander the Great Eastern expedition in the 4th Century B.C., he named the island «Ikaros» after an island of the same name in the Agean Sea. Roman Geographers referred to it as Icara, and philologists trace «Failakah» to the original name. Among the items of interest which have been found here is a limestone inscription unearthed in the Sotira Temple with a message from Alexander to the people of Failakah.

The Trade Centre

During the early Islamic period, the centre of life in Kuwait shifted to a small peninsula located at the head of Kuwait Bay near the present town of Jahra: Kazimah.

Because of its attraction for the desert Arab, in search of water and forage for his flocks and merchants and traders, because of its natural harbour, Kazimah became an important trading centre, where pilgrims and travellers stopped on their way to and from Mecca and other towns in the Arabian peninsula.

Recently Kazimah has attracted the interest of Danish archeologists. Preliminary surveys along the northern shore of Kuwait Bay, and particularly the Kazimah area, have shown four area to be of special interest. The discovery of hard stone tools indicates that the area was the home of past civilizations, while more recent historical records would indicate that the once flourishing city itself is worthy of further research and excavation.

Kuwait grew from a settlement on the site of Kuwait City about the beginning of the 18th century, when a number of families of the Anaiza tribe migrated from the interior to the shore of the Gulf. The rulin families of Kuwait, Saudi Arabia and Bahrain step from this tribe.

Kuwait and Britain

In 1756 the head of the as-Sabah family was selected Amir, or Ruler. The need for security and for representation in dealings with the Ottoman Government probably prompted the selection of a leader. An as-Sabah has been Ruler of Kuwait since then.

Relations with the British began as a result of the transfer by the East India Company of the southern terminal of its overland mail route (through Aleppo) from Basra to Kuwait when the former was captured by the Persians during the Turkish-Persian war of 1776.

In 1899 the Ruler, Shaikh Moubarak the Great, sought British protection, which was granted under a treaty similar to those Britain made with other Gulf Shaikhdoms in the 1890s.

Under the treaty the Shaikhdom's foreign relations were handled through the British Foreign Office. In 1904 the British Political Agency was established.

An American Consulate was opened shortly after World War II. In 1941, the British formally agreed that Kuwait was an independent principality under British protection.

Statehood

Government power, though vested with the Ruler and his family, derived its main support until the end of World War II from the Kuwaiti merchant families which were the sources of the Shaikhdoms' modest prosperity and contributed, directly or indirectly, the major part of its limited government revenue.

After World War II the material needs of oil exploration and oil production and the feverish development of governmental and private activities in the fields of construction, transport, banking, trade and public services caused a stream of immigration, mainly from Arab countries.

In the 1950's the primary source of prosperity shifted from the merchants to Government, which dispended the oil revenues. Thus the ruling family, and particularly its head, the Ruler, became more important.

In January 1961, the Government announced that Kuwait was now fully responsible for her foreign relations. In June 1961, the 1899 agreement was replaced by a treaty of friendship and consultation with the United Kingdom.

Since the new treaty with Bitain, Kuwait has been moving rapidly toward democratic government. A constitution has been promulgated and a National Assemply elected to which the ministers heading the various ministries of the Government are responsible, although they continue to be appointed by the Ruler.

Events in 1965-1977

The Ruler of Kuwait, Emir Abdallah as-Salem as-Sabah, died on 24 November 1965, aged 70, and was succeeded by the Crown Prince Shaikh Sabah as-Salem as-Sabah who was Prime Minister until his accession.

In October 1966 a new Kuwait Bank was opened in London called the «United Bank of Kuwait» and jointly owned by the National Bank of Kuwait, the Commercial Bank of Kuwait, the Gulf Bank, the Kuwait Investment Company and the Kuwait Foreign Trading, Contracting and Investing Company. It had a capital of £ 1,000,000. Reports that removal of funds from Beirut to finance the new bank had been instrumental in the Intra Bank crisis were devied.

A new University of Kuwait was inaugurated on 27 November 1966, with faculties of Arts, Science, and Education.

The Arab-Israeli War

Shortly after the news was received in Kuwait of the outbreak of hostilities in the A.R.E. and Jordan, the Emir declared in a broadcast statement that Kuwait was putting all its resources into the struggle.

In 1967, Kuwait joined the Arab oil embargo on exports to Great Britain and the USA on the ground of their supposed complicity in the Arab- Israeli war.

In diplomacy, Kuwait's closest concern was the future of the Arabian Gulf. During a visit from the Iranian foreign minister in July, the Kuwaiti Prime Minister announced his country's agreement with the Iranian view that British forces should be withdrawn from the Gulf.

Kuwait was in 1974 in the forefront in measures to increase oil companies' interests, and preserve its natural resources by cutting back production and keeping more of its oil wealth under the ground.

An agreement for 60 per cent state participation in the Kuwait Oil Company, jointly owned by British Petroleum and Gulf Oil, was signed in January.

Another agreement on the terms of the full nationalization, with effect from March 5, 1975 of the Kuwait Oil Company (KOC), in which British Petroleum and Gulf Oil had hitherto each held a 20 per cent stake, was signed on Dec. 1,1975, and ratified by the Kuwait National Assembly on March 18, 1976. Foreign participation in Kuwait's oil production thus became limited to two companies-the Arabian Oil Company of Tokyo and the American Independent Oil Company.

Crown Prince Jaber

Following the death on Dec. 31, 1977, of the Amir (Ruler) of Kuwait, Shaikh Sabah as Salim as Sabah (63), the Crown Prince and Prime Minister, Shaikh Jaber al Ahmad al Jaber as Sabah (49), a cousin of the late Amir, became the country's new ruler in accordance with the constitution.

Following a 40-day period of mourning for the late ruler, the Amir, on Feb. 8, appointed the new Heir Apparent as Prime Minister and charged him with forming a new government.

Internal security developments (1981)

On the instructions of the Minister of the Interior, Shaikh Nawaf al Ahmad al Jabir, 28 officers were on July 26, 1981 retired from the armed forces in an effort to improve the country's security system (while a further eight officers retired at their own request during the following week). The Interior Ministry had latterly publicly accused the security forces of inaction over recent terrorist incidents in Kuwait, which were widely seen as reflecting a dispute between the Shia Moslem minority, which had been encouraged by the 1979 Iranian revolution to seek greater official recognition, and the (predominantly Sunni) Kuwaiti leadership.

Several of the incidents involved Iranians and included, on April 29, an attempt on the life of the then Iranian Foreign Minister, Mr. Sadeq Qotbzadeh, during a visit to Kuwait. Among other targets were the Kuwait Oil Company, outside whose London offices a bomb exploded on June 1, and the daily Al-Rai al Amm, whose Kuwaiti offices were devastates by a bomb explosion on July 12 which killed one person and wounded 18 others.

On January 23, 1963, elections took place in Kuwait to the first National Assembly under a new Constitution promulgated on November 16, 1962 which replaced the provisional constitution in force since January 7, 1962. The Principal provisions of the new Constitution are as follows:

1-Sovereignty & the State. Kuwait is an independent sovereign Arab State; her sovereignty may not be surrendered and no part of the territory may be relinquished. Any offensive war is prohibited by the Constitution.

Succession to the Ruler shall be restricted to descendants of the late Moubarak as-Sabbah, and an Heir Apparent must be appointed within one year of the succession to the new Ruler.

2-Executive. Executive powershall be vested in the Ruler, who shall exercise it through a Council of Ministers. The Ruler shall appoint a Prime Minister after the "traditional consultations" and shall appoint and dismiss ministers ont the Prime Minister's recommendation. Ministers need not be drawn from among elected members of the National Assembly.

3-Legislature. A National Assembly of 50 members shall be elected by all natural-born literate Kuwaiti males over the age of 21, except Servicemen and Police who shall not be permitted to vote. Candidates for election must be over the age of 30. Ministers and members of the National Assembly shall not engage in commercial activities, nor shall they be entitled to sell land to the Government.

The National Assembly shall normally have a life of four years and shall sit for at least eight months every year. A new election shall take place within 2 months of any dissolution of the National Assembly.

The Ruler may ask for reconsideration a Bill which has been passed by the National Assembly and sent to him for ratification, but the Bill shall automatically become law if it is thereupon passed either by a two-thirds majority or by a simple majority in a subsequent session. The Ruler may declare martial law, but his decree shall have to be approved by the National Assembly.

The National Assembly may pass a vote of no confidence in a minister, in which case the minister must resign. In the case of a Prime Minister such a vote is not permissible, but the National Assembly may approach the Ruler on the matter, and the Ruler must then either dismiss the Prime Minister or dissolve the Assembly.

An annual budget must be presented, and shall be approved by an independent financial control commission.

4-Civil Service. Only Kuwaiti citizens may be admitted to Civil Service, and only natural-born citizens may attain top senior posts.

5-Civils Rights. Islam is the State religion, but all religious ceremonies shall be admitted, so long as they do not violate public order or morality.

Freedom of opinion and of the Press are guaranteed "within the limits of the law" and censorship prohibited "except in cases and in a manner provided by the law".

Trade Unions shall be allowed, and private property and individual liberties guaranteed. The State shall help citizens incapacitated by old age, sickness or inability to work.

Justice in Kuwait is administered as follows: a) by Magistrates' Courts which have jurisdiction in criminal matters and contraventions; b) by Criminal Assizes which deal with felonies; and c) by Misdemeanour Courts which hear appeals in cases of misdemeanour.

Civil cases are adjudicated by a General Court within which are specialised chambers (commerce, personal status, summary jurisdiction, etc...)

Appeal is made to a High Appeal Court, but a Higher Appeal Court (Known as Court of Cassation) administers justice in personal status disputes.

Petroleum sector

Petroleum is Kuwait's principal natural resource and the mainstay of its economy, accounting in 1980 for over two thirds of gross domestic product (GDP) at current prices, about three fourths of government revenues, and 90 per cent of export earnings. In 1980 Kuwait accounted for 2.7 per cent of world oil output and 6 per cent of the output of the members of the Organisation of Petroleum Exporting Countries (OPEC). Kuwait's proven oil reserves of 68 billion barrels are estimated to be the second largest in the world - after Saudi Arabia - and amount to 10 per cent of the world total. On the basis of recent production levels, they are expected to last at least a century and a half.

Kuwait's onshore oil production, which constitutes the bulk of the country's output, is fully state-owned and controlled. The Governments of Kuwait and Saudi each have a 30 per cent share in offshore operations in a «Divided Zone», while the remaining 40 per cent is held by a group of Japanese companies. The main aims of Kuwait's petroleum policy are: (1) conserving the country's oil and gas reserves; (2) maximizing long-term sales revenues through flexible marketing; (3) increasing domestic value added in exports; and (4) investing in petroleum industry abroad. Since early 1980 these aims have been pursued by the Kuwait Petroleum Corporation, which was established by consolidating four existing state-owned but autonomous enterprises to hold, direct, and streamline the state's investments in the sector. The Corporation is responsible for marketing both crude oil and refined products and derives its income from the excess of its sales prices over crude oil purchased from the state at an official price determined in accordance with OPEC decisions.

Both the conservation objective and a flexible marketing strategy have influenced decisions on production levels in recent years. Following reduced output of crude oil during the mid-1970s, the authorities raised production in late 1978 and in 1979 to about 2.5 million barrels a day, as market conditions became tight and prices rose. With increased budgetary revenues thereafter, owing to upward price adjustments, and with the market eventually softening, the Kuwaiti authorities reduced oil output and exports. As a result of successive cuts in the production ceiling and a continued softening in demand, average production in 1981 fell to slightly over. 1.1 million barrels a day. The estimated average price of over $ 35.50 a barrel realized by Kuwait for its petroleum exports in 1981 was nearly three times the price in 1978, although during the last two months of 1981 the price of crude oil declined to $ 33.00 a barrel. The price for 1982 was then set at $ 32.30 a barrel.

Kuwait's investment in petroleum is focused on refining and on production of petrochemicals, both domestically and abroad, but investment opportunities in other areas of the sector are also being explored. The authorities plan to expand and upgrade the local refineries substantially by 1985 to be able to process about half of the country's crude oil output and produce a lighter, more valuable mix of petroleum products. As a result, the expansion of the national tanker fleet emphasizes product carriers rather than crude oil tankers. Meanwhile, utilization of previously flared natural gas has been substantially increased, and petrochemical projects are being shifted from fertilizer into more sophisticated products. Several opportunities for joint ventures abroad in refining and petrochemicals are also being pursued. In addition, the Kuwait Petroleum Corporation has begun to invest in oil exploration abroad, notably in other developing countries, and has recently acquired an oil drilling and service company. These investments appear to be gradually developing the Corporation into an integrated international oil company.

Other industries

By comparison with the oil based projects Kuwait's other manufacturing industries are small. In spite of the fact that since 1974 the Industrial Bank of Kuwait has actively encouraged the development of industry through long-term low-interest loans, very few industries have been established. However, there are some half dozen successful large plants in operation which are supplying home needs for a range of basic products and also providing a substantial surplus for export. A committee for Industrial Development has recently been established with far-reaching prerogatives affecting the licensing and operation of local industries in Kuwait but it remains to be seen whether this Committee will actively push for an acceleration in industrial development.

Foreign Investments

Although no official figures are available, long term investments abroad are now thought to total around $ 30 billion, generating an income in excess of $ 2 billion per annum. This income is reinvested in foreign investments as is the considerable portion of current surpluses which cannot be absorbed by the local economy. Kuwait's overall investment strategy is one of diversification. It has made substantial efforts to find investment outlets in the Arab world but the shortage of reliable and profitable opportunities there has led to the bulk of investment being directed elsewhere, notably to the US. About $ 20 billion, roughly 66%, of Kuwait's longterm investments are in the United States, including stock in most of the top 500 industrial companies. The balance is mainly invested in Western Europe. The country's wealth is growing so rapidly that it is finding it increasingly difficult to find suitable and diversified investments and it seems likely to increase its holdings in developing countries such as South Korea and Brazil. However, it appears that Kuwait's overall investment strategy will continue to be based on the anticipation of the long-term health and stability of the Western countries.

Kuwait fund for Arab Economic Development

Official assistance to developing countries has in recent years averaged about KD 300 millions (more than $ 1 billion) annually, mainly in the form of grants committed under various inter-Arab agreements. Responsibility for most official project loans has been shifted to the Kuwait Fund for Arab Economic Development, an autonomous lending agency established in 1961, whose operations now extend to about 50 developing countries. The Kuwait Fund's authorized capital was doubled to KD 2.0 billion in 1981, and steady government increases in its paid-in capital have expanded its resources considerably. Its scope of operations was also enlarged recently to permit, inter alia, direct equity investment in developing countries' projects. Since its inception, the Kuwait Fund has made total disbursements of some KD 500 million, with the recipients of larger amounts including countries in the Indian sub-continent as well as Arab States; Kuwait has made sizable contributions and capital subscriptions to international institutions; it lent SDR 685 million to the International Monetary Fund under the oil facility and has committed SDR 400 million for the suplementary financing facility.

EDUCATION

Education is free from kindergarten through postgraduate levels, both at home and abroad. Among the perquisites all students enjoy are free books, free school meals, free uniforms, free transportation between home and school and, of course, free medical and dental services.

At the University of Kuwait women, who have achieved absolute equality in education at all levels, actually outnumber the men.

This was not always so: in 1937 a mere 140 girls attended school.

Although Kuwait University now offers doctoral programmes, so great is the need and absorptive capacity of the Kuwait economy for technologists, engineers and other professionals that large numbers of recent graduates go abroad, especially to the United States, for advanced study. There, the scholars' university expenses are pais, and in addition they receive 1,300 US Dollars per month living allowance.

HEALTH AND SOCIAL SERVICES

In health services advances similarly have been impressive. Within a twenty years span, the facilities have been expanded from one hospital to 15 and from four physicians to about 1,400, or a ratio of one doctor for every 750 persons. All medical services are free to persons residing in the country, regardless of nationality. As with education, most doctors and nurses are non-Kuwaitis, largely drawn from other Arab countries. Allocations for social services consistently have been around 25% of total budgetary expenditures. Health and education account for about 20% alone.

Every citizen is guaranteed a minimum standard of living. Additionally, any Kuwaiti whose income is less than £ 200 is eligible to participate in low income housing programmes. To judge how liberal this stand is, it should be recalled that there is no personal income tax in Kuwait. Dwellings are purchased over a 25-year period, interest free. The home may not be transferred to an individual who is not a member of the owner's family, which ensures that such housing remains in the hands of low-income Kuwaitis. There are, as well, pension programmes and state care for the aged when needed.

Pension Schemes

The law provides for pensions in the following categories: termination of service due to cancellation of the job performed, dismissal for other than disciplinary action, death or total disability, exhaustion or sick leave and inability to work, termination of service for health reasons, age, married women (after 15 years of perticipation). The pensions are calculated at the monthly rate of 65 per cent of the last salary with 15-year participation as the base of calculation. The rate is increased by two per cent for every year over the 15-year period up to a maximum of 95 per cent of salary in the case of 30-year participation.

In the case of resignation, pensions are reduced by five per cent to those below 45 years of age, by two per cent for those below 52 years of age; and Prime Ministers and Ministers in the scheme are entitled on termination of services to a monthly pension equal to 75 per cent of salary provided they have served in office for a full four years. If the period of service is less than one year then the pension is calculated on the basis of 15-year participation.

Roads

Both metalled and unsurfaced roads cover an area of 1,250,000 square kilometre.

There is a good road between Basra (Iraq) and Kuwait and it is possible to make the journey between the two cities in about three hours by car.

In Kuwait itself there are two good roads between Kuwait City and Ahmadi, which is the Kuwait Oil Company's centre of operation and also the other main centre of population in Kuwait. Regular bus services are provided by the Kuwait Transport Co., S.A.K.

It is now estimated that there are about three quarters of a million cars using Kuwait's modern highways.

Ports

Kuwait Port at Shuwaikh, has a deep water quay, dredged to 33 feet and capable of berthing simultaneously up to 6 large cargo vessels. Additional berthing facilities are available for two ships up to 550 feet in length and for smaller craft.

The port development plan completed in 1974 includes the construction of 10 new berths, a deep fishing harbour, a shipbuilding and repair yard, and dredging a deeper approach channel. Handling capacity 2 million tons a year.

Shuabia Port, south of Kuwait, has a handling capacity of 1,500,000 tons.

Salmiyah Port: Construction of this new port was completed in 1979.

Civil Aviation

The main international airport is situated about 10 miles from the centre of Kuwait City, and the road journey takes about 20 minutes.

Kuwait Airways Corporation: Est. 1954; has services in operation to principal Middle Eastern points, to Karachi and Bombay, and three times a week to Geneva, Frankfurt, Paris and other Continental capitals. Direct flights from London to Kuwait are operated by KAC as well as by BA, Air India and Pakistan International Airlines.

Recently, KAC took over operations from Trans-Arabian Airways which had regular services to Cairo, Jerusalem, Beirut, Damascus and Doha.

Kuwait is also served by Air France, Alia (Jordan), Alitalia, Iran Air, Iraq Airways, Middle East Airlines, Swissair, Sabena, KLM, Lufthansa, Saudi Arabian Airlines, etc.

There are no air services within Kuwait.

RADIO, TELEVISION, CINEMA AND PRESS

A. - Radio

Kuwait Broadcasting Station: P.O.Box 397; Est. 1951. Fourteen transmitters, including 7 L/M wave, 6 short wave, 1 ultra short wave. Power of transmitters 3,426 Kw. Hours of broadcasting: 126h. 30 per week, including News (8h.), Education (3h.42), Light entertainment (89h. 35), Arts & science (3h. 36), programmes for special audiences (21h. 30).

B. - Television

Television of Kuwait: P.O.Box 621, Kuwait; Public corporation (Est. 1961). Seven transmitters (including 2 auxiliary and 1 experimental). Programmes (49 hours per week) include: News (10h. 30), Commercials (1h. 45), Education (0h. 30), Light entertainment (24h.), Arts & Science (2h.), for special audiences (10h.).

C. - Cinema

There are ten cinemas and more are planned. Kuwait is one of the few places in the world where the advent of television has not affected the cinema industry. The latest addition to the list is the well-equipped drive-in cinema situated close to Kuwait International Airport. Cinema seating capacity is around the 14,000 mark. On an average 250 films are screened every year and they include American, Arab, Indian, Pakistani, British, Italian, French and Soviet productions. Patrons annually total nearly four million.

GEOGRAPHY

Libya consists of two fertile strips on the Mediterranean and of a vast desert hinterland, studded with oases. The coast stretches from Tunisia to Egypt. The western boundary marches with Tunisia and southern Algeria, until it finally reaches West Africa about 700 miles from the Mediterranean. The eastern boundary runs for an equal distance down to Djebel Oweinat, at the junction of Egypt and the Republic of the Sudan, and then follows the Sudan frontier for a further 250 miles to its junction with the boundary of Equatorial Africa in the foothills of the Erdi region.

The Mediterranean coastline of Libya is about 1,200 miles long, though the distance as the crow flies is only 800. The area of the country is approximately 1,759,500 square Km. while the fertile coastal strips are nowhere broader than 50 miles. Their continuity is broken round the barren and forbidding Gulf of Sirte where the desert comes right down to the sea and separates the settled areas of Cyrenaica from those of Tripolitania by a barrier 3000 miles wide. In the southern desert the distances between the oases are too great to allow casual movement between them except within the group of oases known as the Fezzan.

Climate

In terms of climate Libya can be divided into three zones. The coastal strip is predominantly well watered and has a warm Mediterranean climate. In it are found the principal towns and villages, and an overwhelming majority of the population. Rainfall is somewhat irregular and occurs mostly from October to March. No rainfalls in June, July or August. Further to the south is the second zone, which is too arid for permanent villages though it provides grazing for nomadic tribes who also grow barley, rainfall permitting. Its climate is rather extreme and the Ghibli, a hot wind from the south can shrivel plants like a flame. It is, however, the chief barley producing area in the country. The third zone is absolute desert, apart from the Cyrenaican oases groups of Jalo, Marda, Kufra and the Fezzan. It has virtually no rain but a typically extreme desert climate. Before the coming of the motor car, it could only be crossed by camel, and even for the nomad journeys were often made hazardous by parching sandstorms and the great heat.

Principal Cities & Towns

Tripoli and Benghazi are the two main cities of Libya.

Tripolitania - Tripoli is by far the most important urban centre and is also the chief port.

The main population centres are:

Tripoli	735,083
Homs - Kussabat	162,126
Misurata	177,903
Zavia	247,628

Cyrenaica - Benghazi is the main town.

The main population centres are:

Benghazi	337,423
Derna	122,984

Fezzan - Sebha is the main town.

The population centres are:

Sebha	113,006
Ubari	132,000

For administrative purposes, the country is now divided into 10 Governorates.

Over half the population of Tripolitania, the most heavily populated area, is comprised of Arabs and Berbers (many of whom are nomadic or semi - nomadic) with some negroid blood.

Cyrenaica's population is largely Arab, with considerable negroid intermixture.

The population of Fezzan is predominantly negroid.

Language - Arabic is the official language. After the 1969 revolution all public signs, name plates, street signs in other than Arabic were removed or destroyed. All correspondence with Government departments should be in Arabic. As from 1973 all entries in passports held by foreigners applying for an entry visa must be worded in Arabic.

English is fairly widely spoken or understood in Libyan business and government circles. In Tripolitania, Italian is generally understood.

Religion - There are minority groups of Italians, Greeks and Maltese, of different Christian denominations. Up to 1950, there were significant numbers of Jews-craftsmen, artisans and merchants but most of them emigrated to Israel.

Public holidays (1983)

Anniversary of Libyan Revolution (1 September); Anniversary of Evacuation of Fascist Settlers (7 October); Anniversary of Evacuation of British troops (31 March); Anniversary of Evacuation of American troops (11 June); Anniversary of Egyptian Revolution (23 July); Mulid al Nabi-birthday of the Prophet (16 December); Eid al Fitr, end of Ramadan, month of Muslim fasting and prayer (11-13 July); Eid al Adha, feast of the Sacrifice (17-20 September); Muslim New Year, first day of AH 1403 (7 October); Ashura, day of mourning for Shi'it Muslims (16 October).

HISTORY

Between the Xth century B.C. and the formal proclamation of its independence by the UN in 1949, Libya came under the domination of successive waves of invaders: Berbers, Phoenicians, Greeks. Romans, Vandals, Byzantines, Arabs, Ottomans, Italians, and was finally conquered by British and French troops in 1942.

Under the assumed name of the United Kingdom of Libya in 1951, the country enjoyed political stability and good relations with both the Arab world and the West until the monarchy was toppled from power in September 1969 by a group of young nationalist officers led by Col. Muammar al-Kaddafi.

On March 2, 1977, it was officially announced in Tripoli that the official name of the Libyan Arab People's Republic had been changed to «Popular Socialist Libyan Arab Jamahiriyah» (the last word being newly coined in Arabic to mean «state of the masses»).

In March 1979, Col. Kaddafi resigned from his post of Secretary General of the GPC (General National Congress) to devote more time to preserving the cultural revolution he launched in April 1973 which, in point of fact, was an attempt to run the country on a purely Islamic basis.

Conflict with the USA (1980-82)

Libya's claim to sovereignty in the Gulf of Sirte led to conflict with the United States in August 1981 and in early 1982.

Following the downing by the US of two Libyan jet fighters over the Gulf of Sirte in 1981, Libya alleged on Feb. 3 1982 that US Phantoms had intercepted a commercial Libyan airliner in Greek airspace, chasing it for seven miles. While denying interception of the Libyan airliner, the US Navy conceded that some jets of the Sixth Fleet had inspected five unidentified aircrafts, later found to be civilian.

Relations between the United States and Libya had deteriorated in the latter part of 1981 amid reports that Libyan assassination squads had been sent to the United States to kill President Reagan, who on Dec. 10 had called on all US citizens living in Libya to leave the country as soon as possible.

Decline in oil production:

The fall in the world demand for oil in 1981 and Libya's reluctance to reduce the price of its oil in line with the policies of the other oil-producing countries led to a reduction in national output from 2,000,000 barrels per day (bpd) in early 1980 to 600,000 bpd by October 1981. In consequence national oil revenue fell from US 22,000 million dollars in 1980 to around 15,000 million in 1981 (according to the Financial Times of Dec. 2 1981). Nevertheless, Libya's foreign currency reserves remained substantial (being estimated at around 8,000 million dollars in May 1982) in addition to which Libya was known to have substantially increased its holdings of gold bullion in 1980-81 and to have shipped the gold to Tripoli.

THE CONSTITUTION

The State and the Government

Libya is a free, independent, sovereign State. Neither its sovereignty nor any part of its territory may be relinquished.

Libya is a republic and its system of government is representative. Territorially, Libya consists of the Provinces of Cyrenaica, Tripolitania and the Fezzan. Arabic shall be the official language of the State which shall have two capitals: Tripoli and Benghazi.

Rights of the People

Every person who resides in Libya and has no other nationality, or is not the subject of any other State, shall be deemed a Libyan, provided that he meets one of the following conditions:

a- that he was born in Libya.

b- that either of his parents was born in Libya.

c- that he has had his normal residence in Libya for a period of not less than 10 years.

Libyans shall be equal before the law. They shall enjoy equal civil and political rights, shall have the same opportunities and be subject to the same public duties and obligations, without distinction of religion, belief, race, language, wealth, kinship or political or social opinion.

Personal liberty shall be guaranteed and everyone shall be entitled to equal protection by the law. Anyone charged with an offence shall be presumed innocent until proved guilty.

Freedom of conscience shall be absolute. The State shall respect all religions and faiths and shall ensure to Libyans and foreigners residing in its territory freedom of conscience and the right freely to practise religion so long as it is not a breach of public order and is not contrary to morality. Freedom of thought shall be guaranteed. Everyone shall have the right to express his opinion and to publish it by all means and methods.

Every Libyan shall have the right to education. The State shall ensure the diffusion of education by means of the establishment of public schools, and of private schools which it may permit to be established under its supervision for Libyans and foreigners.

Property shall be inviolable. No owner may be prevented from disposing of his property except within the limits of the law. No property of any person shall be expropriated except in the public interest and in the cases and in the manner determined by law, and provided such person is awarded fair compensation. The penalty of general confiscation of property shall be prohibited.

Taxation

No tax may be imposed, modified or abolished except by law. No one may be exempt from the payment of taxes except in cases provided by law. No one may be asked to pay any amounts of fees except within the limits of the law.

No pension, compensation, gratuity or payment from provident fund may be approved for payment out of the Government Treasury, except within the limits of the law.

No public loan or undertaking that is likely to be a charge on the Treasury for one or more of the following years may be contracted without the consent of the Revolutionary Command Council.

The Revolutionary Command Council

Supreme authority is vested in the Revolutionary Command Council which has power to appoint the Council of Ministers, to sign and modify treaties and to declare war. It retains power over the armed forces and the diplomatic corps.

THE GOVERNMENT

JUSTICE

The Judicial System is formed of: The Supreme Court, Courts of Appeal (in Tripoli, Benghazi and Misurata), Courts of First Instance, Summary Courts and the People's Court (cases of political and administrative corruption)

In 1971, the Revolution Command Council decreed that the basic principles of Islamic Law should be applied to all legislation.

In 1979, the People's Committees for Justice took in hand the judicial power.

Economic Factors

As a result of the rapid development of her oil resources over the last 15 years Libya has, economically, become a new country. Two five-year development plans have duly been carried out, and the third plan (1976-80) raised the workforce engaged in the various sectors of the country's economy to almost one million hands, causing a drift from the land into the oilfields and urban centres.

Agriculture

Traditionally, however Libya was basically an agricultural country. The Libyan Government is anxious to check and reverse this drift and to revive agricultural production by giving strong encouragement to the farming community. Land reclamation, extended irrigation systems and reafforestation are being extensively carried out. Experimental farms have been set up to demonstrate the use of machinery and fertiliser.

Barley is the largest crop. Olive groves are widespread. Good quality citrus fruits are grown. Almonds, tomatoes and other vegetables, tobacco, dates and groundnuts are also produced on a significant scale.

Industry

There is as yet limited industrial activity in Libya though every effort is made to stimulate its growth. Existing industry includes food processing, cigarette manufacture, paint, cement, olive oil, motor vehicle workshops, soft drinks, flour, biscuits, macaroni factories as well as small enterprises in local handicrafts. Factories are under construction to make among other manufactures, glassware, electric cables, steel pipes, clothing, textiles and shoes.

The government also contributes to manufacturing. The Libyan Tobacco Monopoly processes all tobacco and controls its import and export. There are also government monopolies for salt and esparto grass.

Power

Power production projects are many. Libya's electricity network is weak and studies are underway for its gradual development. New power stations are to be set up and, in 1974, power production reached 250,000 kW which was then raised to 500,000 kW by 1979 at a total cost of LD 32 million.

British and Yugoslav contractors have been awarded contracts for the execution of a number of electrification projects in Tripoli, while the Italian firm "Sadelmi Copegi" has built a 30 kw transmission grid between Benghazi, and Tobruk.

Libyan Oil

The History of the oil industry in Libya dates from the discovery of Esso's Zelten field in the spring of 1959. That ushered in the period of commercial production.

On the basis of geological work done so far, there are four areas of Libya which are regarded as proven or potential oil basins. These are:

- The Sirte Basin in Central Libya
- The Murzuk Basin in the southest
- The Ghadames Basin in the west
- The Kufra area in the south-east.

To date, more than 100 oil fields have been found in Libya. Of these one-third are considered commercial. The fields found in the Sirte Basin are far more prolific than those in other areas and all the current Libyan oil production comes from the Basin. The increase in that production has been startling: from 40,000 barrels a day in 1961 to an average 1,740,000 barrels daily in 1967, and to an average peak of 2,250,000 barrels in 1977, before decliving to 1,120,000 b/d in 1981.

An important landmark was reached in 1975 when the National Oil Corporation announced the discovery of what is perhaps the potentially largest oilfield in Libya in the offshore concession 137, about 100 kilometres north of Żuara port, by Aquitaine Libye (50%), Elf Libye (25%), OMV (15%) and Wintershall (10%). The Libyan Government is entitled to 85% of any production.

Refining

At present Libya has six oil refineries, with an annual capacity of 3.82 million tonnes. Three more are plannes-at Tobruk, Zuetina and Misurata-in order to raise refining capacity to 45 million metric tons by Dec. 1980.

Petrochemicals

Petro-chemical industries are developing fast. At Mersaat Brega a $ 190 million 272,000 tons per annum ammonia plant is now open, together with a $ 100 million urea plant which went on stream in 1980 with an initial capacity of 152,000 tons per annum.

These plants now enable the Libyan Government to consider ventures in such fields as the manufacture of plastics, the expansion of its textile industry by using synthetic fibres, the production of protein and fertilizers.

Nationalisation

Meanwhile, in pursuance of the policy of nationalisation and general redistribution of wealth expounded by Col. Kadhafi in "The Green Book" of 1975 and to bring about the "abolition of private commerce in 1981" (as propounded by the Secretary-General of the General People's Congress, Mr. Mohamed az-Zarrouk Ragab, in March 1981), all shops throughout the country were closed in the course of the year and were replaced by huge supermarkets. The stocks in these new stores were purchased directly by the state (import duties and the charges of retail intermediaries being eliminated) and sold at a mark-up of only one or two per cent to cover operational costs.

EDUCATION

Public education is free and primary education is compulsory for both boys and girls. Arabic is the language of instruction at all levels. The few private schools are attended largely by aliens. About 85 percent of the school-age population attends classes.

The school system is composed of a six-year primary level, a three-year intermediate and vocational level, and a three-year secondary and advanced vocational level. There are also about 100 Qur'anic schools, which are financed by the government.

Higher education is offered by the secular state institutions of the University of Libya. Advanced religious training is obtained at a branch of the university at al-Bayda'. Libyan students also study abroad in Egypt, Europe, and the United States.

HEALTH SERVICES

Medical and hospital care and medicines are free. The country has a total capacity of one hospital bed for every 260 persons. Most care is available in hospitals as there are few outpatient or specialized-care facilities. Facilities are adequate only in Tripoli and Benghazi, but there are a number of health centres in rural areas.

Most medical personnel are aliens, and the training of Libyan women as nurses is hampered by religious custom.

TRANSPORT

Roads and Harbours

With the arrival of the Italians in 1911 a great improvement was made in ports and communications. Italian engineers provided modern harbour facilities at Tripoli and Benghazi and built a road system of over 6,200 miles. This links both the urban settlements of the coast and the administrative centres of the interior. Even the far oases of the Fezzan and Kufra are connected with the coast by motorable tracks which have subsequently been widened and metalled, especially after the Second World War.

The coastal road from the Tunisian border to the Arab Republic of Egypt, which runs for about 1,140 miles, via Zwara, Zavia Tripoli, Homs, Zliten, Misurata, Sirte, al-Agheila, Agedabia, Benghazi, al-Marj (Barce), Beida, Derna and Tobruk has been widened and resurfaced. It provides a through motor route from Cairo via Libya to Tunis and on to Algiers and Casablanca.

At the end of 1969 the important road linking the coastal road to Sebha in the south was virtually completed along its length of 190 km. A further project connected Sebha and Murzuk whilst a study has been made of the Murzuk-el Gatron connection. The Sebha-Murzuk connection running over 130 kilometres cost three million dinars.

The Agebadia-Jalo road has also been pushed south wards and there has been a study of the Jalo-Kufrah connection. Kufra is some 800 km from the existing road and 600 km from Jalo itself. The first 90 km of the road was completed in 1971 and the next phase was for 140 km to Jalo at a cost of 3 million dinars. The development of Kurah as an agricultural area called for further road work in the three year plan ended in 1975 and roads are also needed to connect the Fazzan area.

In the west, Tripoli is connected to Ben Ulid and Mizda and Nalut. A road has been constructed from Nalut to Gadames which is the common border of Libya, Algeria and Tunisia. This road was completed in 1973 having cost 4.5 million dinars. There is also a network of roads centred on Garian and Tripoli and in the East a road system linking Benghazi, Benina and Derna via Barce.

In the period 1969-1974 a total of 276 million dinars had been spent on roads.

One important road project over the next few years will be the renovation of the Misurata-Sebha road to cost 8.5 million dinars for 650 kilometres.

Shipping

For external communications by sea, Tripoli is the principal port capable of handling ships of all sizes.

Other ports are Benghazi, Derna and Tobruk which also share the incoming traffic. Plans have been adopted for the rehabilitation of Derna Port and for a major harbour for Misurata. The three year plan to 1974/75 included port extensions at Tripoli (from 2.3 to 3.5 million tons), Derna (to 250,000 tons) and Misurata (to 450,000 tons).

In 1973 extension works at Tripoli harbour were initiated as part of a development plan estimated to cost 27 million dinars, including deepwater berths completed in 1976.

Periodical passenger sailings serve Malta, Benghazi, Egypt, France, Italy, Great Britain, etc. Most of the vessels carry both passengers & cargo.

In addition there are five oil terminals:

Mersa Brega	Esso
As-Sidr	Oasis
Ras Lanuf	Mobil, Phillips Amoseas
Marza al-Harega	Bunker Hunt
Zweitina	Occidental

In 1968 a floating quay was constructed at el Hariga to increase tanker handling at that oil terminal. The terminal at Zweitina became operational in 1968 and by the end of the year 13 storage tanks with a capacity of about 7 million barrels were completed. Towards the end of 1968 extensions were being built at Mersa Brega in order to increase capacity and provide facilities for the handling of liquified gas exports.

Civil aviation

Libya's two main airports are Tripoli International, which is 21 miles from Tripoli, and Benina, which is 13 miles from Benghazi.

Libyan Arab Airlines: P.O.Box 2555, Tripoli; P.O.Box 360, Benghazi, Sharia Gamal Abdul Nasser, Tel. 4826/2 - 5, operates flights from Tripoli and Benghazi to Europe, Asia and Africa.

In Tripoli other airlines operating services to and from Libya include:

British Caledonian - Air Algérie - K.L.M. - Lufthansa - Swissair - T.W.A. - Tunis Air-Middle East Airlines - Alitalia - Aeroflot

GEOGRAPHY

The Islamic Republic of Mauritania, on the Atlantic coast of Northwest Africa, is bounded on the northwest by the former Spanish Sahara, on the northeast by Algeria, on the east by the Republic of Mali, and on the south by the Republic of Senegal. Nouakchott is the capital.

The country covers an area of 1,085,000 sq. Km. (470,000 sq. mi.) Most of Mauritania is low-lying desert, with ridges and cliff-like projections between areas of lower and higher altitude. The Senegal River on the southern border is the only waterway. The coastline is generally unidented.

Climate

Thought the climate is generally desertic, three climate regions can be distinguished. Southern Mauritania has a Sahelian climate; there is one rainy season, with rainfall less than 700 mm. (27.5 inches) a year, and only one or two months with more than 50 mm. (2 inches) of rain. Temperature and humidity have wide seasonal and daily variations.

The strip of land along the coast is marked by a sub-Canarian climate, again with only one rainy season and an annual rainfall less than 700 mm (27.5 inches).

Port-Etienne, in the sub-Canarian climatic zone, has an average maximum temperature for the months of January, April, July, and October of approximately 26°, 28°, 29°, and 32° C. (79°, 82°, 84°, and 90° F.) respectively.

There is little plant life in the desert; there is some cactus and related species, and relatively luxuriant growth in the oases. In the far south are found grasses and trees common to the savannah regions, and in particular the baobab tree.

Religion

The state religion is Islam, though religious freedom is assured in the constitution. About 99 % of the population is Muslim. Mauritania has for centuries been a fountainhead of Koranic scholarship, not only in West Africa but throughout the Muslim world. Its religious leaders (marabouts) are widely esteemed. The leading marabouts are conservative, pious, and scholarly, and have resisted modernist movements. French occupation encouraged the development of Islam.

Language

The official languages are Arabic and French.

Public holidays (1983)

Labour Day (May 1); African Liberation Day (May 25); Korite - Eid al Fitr, end of Ramadan, the Muslim month of fasting and self purification (11-13 July); Tabaski - Eid al Adha, feast of the Sacrifice (17-20 September); Muslim New Year's Day (7 October); National Day (November 20); Prophet's birthday (16 December).

Before the arrival of Europeans in the 15th century, the history of the area that is now Mauritania was marked by successive invasions of Arabs and Berbers, who pressed down from the north toward the Senegal River valley. Negro-Africans who lived in the path of the invaders were pushed south. A Berber tribe, the Lemtouna, destroyed the great Sudanese empire of Ghana in the 11th century, and turned northward, conquering North Africa and then Spain. This tribe founded the powerful Almoravides dynasty, headed by Abdullah ibn Yasin. In the 14th and 15th centuries an Arab tribe from Egypt gained gradual control in the area, and, during the 17th century, won complete dominance over the Berbers. The Arab and Berber groups in Mauritania have since thoroughly intermingled, and though members of warrior tribes are considered to be descendants of the Arabs and members of the religious (maraboutic) sects to be Berbers, these distinctions are in many ways academic. Arabic is spoken by all Moors, and most regard themselves as Arab in origin.

The Portuguese were the first Europeans to arrive, attracted in the 15th century by the gum trade. They set up trading posts (escalles) along the Senegal River. Competition was keen among Portuguese, French, Dutch, and English traders. The issue of control was resolved in 1815, when Senegal was given to France in the post-Napoleonic War settlement. During the 19th century the French explored the inland regions and signed treaties with Moorish chieftains. Penetration of the desert zone was accelerated around the turn of the century in attempts to control Moorish raids on the Senegal River tribes. One Frenchman Xavier Coppolani, was responsible for the signing of many treaties, and played a key role in the extension of French influence in the area. He exploited Arab-Berber rivalries and persuaded many tribes of the need for French protection. By 1903 he was in control of Trarza, the Moors' main base for raids on the river tribes. Coppolani was killed in 1905, and his work was completed by Colonel Gouraud, who gained effective control of the Adrar region by 1909. The territory of Mauritania was established as an administrative unit in 1920, and its capital established in Saint Louis in Senegal. Mauritania then became a part of French West Africa, a federation of the eight French territories in West Africa. Like the other territories, it benefited from the «new deal» in French colonial policy since World War II. In 1946 a Mauritania territorial assembly was established, with some control over internal affairs, and Mauritania elected representatives to the French Parliament and the Assembly of the French Union. Between 1946 and 1956, increasing political power passed to local political leaders. Mauritania voted in favor of the constitution of the Fifth French Republic at the referendum of 28 September 1958. As a result it became a self-governing member of the French Community, and the Islamic Republic of Mauritania was established by a constituent assembly in March 1959. The country obtained its complete independence in 1961.

In spite of the misgivings of a large proportion of the Mauritanian population - perhaps of the Government itself - Morocco was in 1976 Mauritanian's closest ally.

Relations with Algeria

The close traditional ties between Algeria and Mauritania were seriously shaken in 1975 and then plummeted in March 1976 when diplomatic relations were broken off over Algeria's recognition of the Sahraoui Arab Democratic Republic. A new low was reached after the raid on Nouakchott in June, for which Mauritania held Algeria directly responsible.

As relations with Algeria deteriorated, so those with Algeria's ideological opponents improved as, for example, with Saudi Arabia and Kuwait.

French Aid

Relations with France again grew closer as a result of the Sahara affair. The French had been Mauritania's main arms suppliers. French public aid amounted to 64. 6m francs in 1975, of which 3.6 m went on investment, 26.3 m on technical assistance, 1.2 m on food aid and 31m on projects financed by the Central Fund of Economic Co-operation (including industrial projects launched by the company SNIM, expansion of the port Nouadhibou, and electric power station in Nouakchott).

The Government of President Mokhtar Ould Daddah was overthrown on July 10, 1978 in a bloodless coup led by Lieut. Colonel Mustapha Ould Mohamed Salek, the Chief of Staff of the Armed Forces.

Lieut. - Colonel Ould Salek (43), regarded as nationalist and pro-western, stated in an interview broadcast by Mauritanian national radio on July 11 that he had seized power primarily because the country was on the verge of bankruptcy due to «economic stagnation, financial decadence, and the daily danger of a revolt, of a people's uprising; the armed forces, he said, «acted in full responsibility and awareness, without any citizens being disturbed in their public or private lives».

On June 3, 1979 Col. Ould Salek handed in his resignation as President of Mauritania and as President of the Military Committee for National Salvation (CMSN) over government policy in Western Sahara.

He was replaced in both posts by Lt. - Col. Mohamed Mahmoud ould Ahmed Louly (36) hitherto Minister of Public Services. At the same time Lt - Col. Haidalla announced the formation of a new Government.

Political Situation

In early January 1980, Lt. - Col. Haidalla, the former prime minister, replaced Lt - Col. Mohamed Louly as head of state. He is the fourth head of state since July 1978 when, in the face of continuing war in the Western Sahara and a deteriorating economic position, a military coup ousted the civilian regime of President Mokhtar Ould Daddah. The Polisario Front then claimed independence for the Western Sahara, annexed by Morocco and Mauritania. It was not until August 1979 that a peace agreement was finally signed, with Mauritania withdrawing its forces from Tiris El-Gharbia, the Southern portion of the Western Sahara. (For the 1981-82 Western Sahara developments see MOROCCO).

Mauritania's government is patterned on the French model; it is a parliamentary democracy. Its constitution was adopted on 22 March 1959 by a constitutional assembly meeting at Nouakchott, the capital. According to the constitution, Mauritania is an «Islamic republic» and a «republican, democratic state». Suffrage is universal and voting secret. Executive power is vested in a prime minister,who is elected by the National Assembly (Assemblée Nationale), The prime minister chooses a Council of Ministers.

Legislative power resides in the National Assembly, which is elected for five years. The Assembly has 40 deputies; it holds two ordinary sessions each year, the first in November and the second in May. No session can exceed two months. Extraordinary sessions can be held on the request of a majority of the members of the Assembly or if called by the prime minister. Both the prime minister and the Assembly introduce laws, although laws introduced by the executive branch have priority on the agenda.

Political parties

Political parties developed in Mauritania only after World War II. Horma Ould Babana, the leader of the first party to be established, the Entente Mauritanienne, was elected to the French National Assembly in the first elections in 1946. His party was considered too radical by the traditional chiefs who organized a more conservative party, the Mauritanian Progressive Union (Union Progressiste Mauritanienne - UPM).

In 1958 the UPM absorbed the weakened Entente into its organization, forming a single party, the Mauritanian Regroupment Party (Parti du Regroupement Mauritanien - PRM). There have since arisen new parties - the Party of the Mauritanian National Renaissance (Al-Nahba al-Wataniya al-Mawritaniya) and the Socialist Union of Mauritanian Muslims (Union Socialiste des Musulmans Mauritaniens) - which reflect the tendency for the dominance of the older, more conservative leaders.

Local administration

Mauritania is divided into 11 administrative districts (cercles), which in turn are divided into sub-divisions and administrative sub-stations. The two cercles in northern Mauritania were for many years administered by military authorities. Administrative officers in the cercles, subdivisions, and posts are appointed by the government. In the towns, administration is assured by a combination of elected and appointed officers. There are four mixed communes of the first degree in the country: Atar, Kaédi, Rosso, and Boghé. Under this system of urban administration the mayor and a town council with advisory status are appointed by the central government.

THE CABINET

Following a two-day meeting of the Military Committee for National Salvation, the Cabinet was reshuffled as follows:

Prime Minister and Minister of Defence: Lt. Col. Moaouia Ould Sidi Mohamed TAYA
Minister of Foreign Affairs and Co-Operation: Capt. Dahane Ould Ahmed MAHMOUD
Minister of the Interior: Cdr. Gabriel CIMPER
Minister of Justice and Islamic Affairs: *Mr. Abdel Aziz Ould AHMED
Minister of Economy and Finance: Mr. Dieng Boubou FARBA
Minister of Fisheries: + Lt.-Col. Soumare SILMAN
Minister of Industry and Commerce: Capt. Mohamed Mahmoud OULD
Minister of Rural Development: *Mr. Mohamed Ould AMAR
Minister of Water and Housing: Mr. Mahjoub Ould BAYYIH
Minister of Equipment, Transport and Communications: Lt-Col. Ahmedou Ould ABDALLAH
Minister of Mines and Energy: + Mr. Mohamed El Mokhtar Ould ZAMEL
Minister of Employment and Training of Cadres: *Mr. Yahya Ould MENKOUSS
Minister of Education: *Mr. Hassiny Ould DIDI

Secretary-General of the Prime Minister's Office: *Mr. Mohammed Yedih Ould BREDELLEIL

Permanent Secretary of CMSN and Information: Maj. Mohamed Sidina Ould SIDIYA

Comptroller-General: Maj. Ann Amadou BARALY

The former Prime Minister, Mr. Bneijara, was appointed Minister-Counsellor to Lt.-Col. Haydalla (in the Latter's capacity as Chairman of the CMSN).

Capt. Mahmoud, the Naval Commander, had hitherto been Permanent Secretary of the CMSN and Cr. Cimper, Chief of the Joint General Staff of the Armed Forces. Mr. Farba was Governor of the Central Bank.

Cdr. Yall Abdoulaye, the Head of the Gendarmerie since April 1980, was appointed Chief of Staff of the Army to replace Lt. Col. Taya.

The Constitution makes the judicial authority independent of the Executive and the Legislature, and provides for the establishment of the Supreme Court and the High Court. Status of the judiciary, the composition of the courts, the rules governing their operation and formulating procedures are determined by law.

Sharia (Muslim law) is applied in Courts of First Instance by Cadis who are selected from graduates of local Mederas (higher institutes of religious studies).

The economy is characterised by a large traditional farming sector co-existing alongside a small modern sector dominated by mining. Although Gross Domestic Product (GDP) per capita averages around $ 350, in the traditional sector it amounts to only $ 150, against $ 1,300 in the modern sector.

The economic stagnation experienced throughout most of the 1970s can be attributed to two main causes: a severe drought in the early part of the decade, that led to substantial food imports, and the war in the Western Sahara. Although the effects of drought could have been tackled directly by channelling the significant quantities of foreign investment obtained into agriculture, funds were instead directed into ambitious schemes designed to widen the industrial base. To date, however, the results have been mixed and the industrial sector, apart from mining, remains insignificant. The advent of war not only boosted government expenditure but led to a fall in revenues by disrupting the iron ore industry. The result was a large budget deficit, a deteriorating trade position and a growing debt burden.

Measures to rectify the situation by the civilian government, which have been continued by the military, have brought some improvement. Budgetary restraint the 1979 budget provided for spending of Ouguiya 10.7 million, only 5% higher than in 1978 combined with a stringent credit policy has reduced growth in the broadly defined money supply from 25% in 1975 to below 2% in 1978, with a decline in the twelve months to August 1979. Similarly, inflation, which peaked at 14.4% in 1976, fell to 3.6% in the year to August, 1979.

In September 1978, a programme of recovery was announced to replace the 1976-80 Development Plan. The overriding aim is to switch resources from the industrial sector to the neglected rural economy. Small and medium sized private business is encouraged whilst the investment code has been revised with more privilèges given to companies engaged in processing domestically produced raw materials.

Mining

Mining accounts for around 20% of GDP and over threequarters of total export earnings, with iron-ore being by far the most important mineral. The combination of low world demand, and production and transport problems associated with the dispute in the Western Sahara seriously reduced iron ore exports in both 1977 and 1978. Between 1976 and 1978 the volume of exports fell by one third to 6.5 million tonnes, and value by 40% to $ 91 million. However, following the ceasefire and boosted by the upturn in iron ore demand, exports rose by 43% in value and by 47% in volume terms in the first half of 1979 compared with the same period the year before. Accordingly exports are thought to have reached 9.5 million tonnes for 1979 as a whole.

As reserves at existing mines will be exhausted by the end of this decade there are plans to exploit fresh iron ore deposits at Guelb, to the North of the present sites. In order to obtain finance for the first phase of the project, which is to cost $ 500 million, SNIM (Société Nationale Industrielle et Minière), previously a nationalised company, sold two-fifths of its capital ($ 120 million) to Arab backers, including Iraq, Morocco, Kuwait, the Islamic Development Bank and the Arab Mining Company. A further $ 360 million was obtained from Western aid organisations and Arab countries. The project involves opening two mines, with reserves of 386 million tonnes, the first in 1981 and the second in 1986. By 1992 production is expected to be at a rate of 12 million tonnes a year. However, the project is something of a long-term gamble given the continued volatility of security in the region, the stiff competition presented by producers such as Brazil and Australia and the slack production profile for western steel which does not augur well for a sustained upturn in the iron ore price.

Agriculture & Fisheries

The traditional sectors, agriculture, livestock, forestry and fishing, account for nearly one third of GDP, employ over 90% of the active population but supply only around 10% of exports. Moreover, whilst livestock contributes almost a quarter to total GDP, the bulk of traditional exports is derived from the fishing industry.

The prolonged drought of the early 1970s together with concentration on mining at the expense of agriculture has led to a severe decline in output. For example, by 1979 the cattle herd had declined to 1.2 million head from 2.4 million in 1969 prior to the drought. Moreover, only 80,000 tonnes of food crops were produced, a level which is appoximately two-fifths below pre-drought ouput and covers only about 40% of domestic requirements. As in previous years the shortfall was made good by aid contributions and private purchases, the latter placing strain on the trade account.

Although it will take many years before production is restored to pre-drought levels, resources are now being diverted towards agriculture. It is planned to introduce a flexible pricing system which should boost production by providing greater monetary incentive, while other measures include the provision of extra and upgraded technical assistance to farmers and greater govenment control over water resources. In addition, in the longer term, irrigation programmes in the South, namely the Senegal River Development Scheme and the Gorgol Noir Irrigation Project, should help to protect agriculture from future droughts.

The fishing industry, based on some of the richest fishing waters in the world, is second only to mining in its contribution to foreign exchange earnings. As a result of large-scale investment, production has increased rapidly since 1974, with the value of exports doubling to $ 26 million in 1978. Despite this impressive performance, as yet Mauritania has not obtained full benefit from its fishing resources. The bulk of fishing has been carried out by foreign vessels which land only a minute proportion of their catch in Mauritania itself. To rectify the situation, new emphasis is now being placed on the industry; a 200-mile exclusive economic zone has been declared and new agreements including joint ventures are being drawn up with some 20 countries to ensure a steady supply of fish to domestic canning plants.

TRANSPORT

Railway

In 1963 a railway connecting Nouadhibou and Akjoujt with the new iron ore fields at Port Gouraud was inaugurated. The 650 Km-long track is standard gauge.

Roads

There are some 3,000 km of roads and tracks, and 5,000 km of local tracks. Several trunk roads now connect Kaédi to Kiffa, Nouakchott to Rosso, and Nouakchott to Akjoujt.

Inland Waterways

Saint Louis (Senegal) is the headquarters of Messageries du Sénégal which operates small coastal vessels as far as Kayes in Mali.

Shipping

Several shipping companies serve Nouadhibou and Nouakchott, the most important being Compagnie Pacquet, Société Navale Delmas et Vieljeux and S.N.I.E. Under an ambitious development programme Nouadhibou is expected to be one the most important port in Africa.

Civil Aviation

Mauritania is served by its national airline Air Mauritanie B.P. 41, Nouakchott-Est. 1962 and by Air Afrique, Iberia, Royal Air Maroc and U.T.A. (Union des Transports Aériens). The country's two main airfields are located at Nouadhibou and Nouakchott, respectively.

GEOGRAPHY

Situated at the north-west corner of the African continent, the present Kingdom of Morocco is shaped like an irregular quadrilateral. Its sides are formed by 620 miles of Atlantic coast, by 290 miles in the Straits of Gibraltar and on the Mediterranean, 310 miles of frontier with Algeria, and 680 miles of frontier with Algeria, and 680 miles of frontier with the Sahara. Morocco falls within latitudes 28 and 36 north and between the 2nd and 11th longitudes west of Greenwich .

The land frontiers are not indicated by definite geographical features such as mountain ranges or rivers.

Morocco's geographical position gives her a special and privileged place among the countries of North Africa, to which she definitely belongs since there is no break in continuity between Morocco and Algeria in the spheres of geography, climate, botany, or the human way of life.

In the north, Morocco projects in the form of the Tangier peninsula as if reaching out to meet Europe and the Iberian peninsula at the point of Tarifa, only nine miles away across the sea.

Geologically, the soil of Morocco has been divided into three principal zones; these differ in age and structure. Northern Morocco is a detached fragment of Europe, and the Rif an Alpine range which prolongs the Andalusian Cordillera.

The country has a strongly marked relief. Several peaks in the High Atlas reach 13,000 feet while Tubkal (13,694) is the highest in all North Africa. It has been pointed out that if the level of the sea were to be raised by 1,000 feet the general outline of the country would still be the same. High plains and plateaux work their way into the heart of the main ranges.

The latter are like a jaw, opening towards the west. The more northerly branch, the Rif, which is prolonged by the Beni Anassen mountains to the east of the Mulyya, runs along the Mediterranean. The lower branch is separated from the former on the east by the narrow Taza Corridor, forms the circle of an arc, north-east and south -west, and ends at the edge of the Atlantic. This branch is more complex than the other. Three ranges can be distinguished: The high Atlas, which runs beside and then accompanies the Middle Atlas range to the north, beyond the valley of the upper Muluya; and in the south the Anti-Atlas, by the footbridge-like Sirma mountain.

This mountain framework has had important consequences some of them happy, others less so. Morocco lies wide open to the ocean to whose beneficent influences she is subject. The two arms of the pincers enfold the fertile plains of the Gharb, the Chaouis, and the Sus, which are the heart and the wealth of the country. Almost all the great cities are to be found there; Fez, Meknes, Rabat, Casblanca, Marrakesh, The Rif on the other hand cuts Morocco off from the Mediterranean which has only played a substantial part in the life of the country by means of the Straits. In the north, Tangier and Tetuan are the only large cities.

Administrative Districts

The country is administratively divided into provinces and two urban prefectures. The main provinces are:

	Area (sq.km.)	Population
Agadir	18,855	879,400
Fès	10,145	1,200,400
Meknès	8,510	710,800
Safi	7,285	615,250

The Prefectures are Casablanca and Rabat-Salé:

Casablanca	1,855	2,116,300
Rabat-Salé	2,100	795,500

Climate

The average temperature during the winter months (November to May) is 15°C (60°F).

At no time the year is the climate extreme except in the interior during the summer.

Public holidays (1983)

New Year 's Day (1 January); Fête du Trône (3 March); Fête du Travail (Labour day) (1 May); Masirat al Khadra (Green March) (6 November); Independence Day (18 November).

Muslim holidays (1983)

Mulid al Nabi- birthday of the prophet (16 December); Lailat al Miraj- ascension of the prophet (26 June); first month of Ramadan, month of fasting and self-purification (6th August); Eid al Fiter (11 July); Eid al Adha (17 September); Muslim New Year (7 October), first day of AH 1403.

HISTORY

The prehistory of Morocco is only just coming to be known. Man seems to have been present in Morocco from the Chellean age.

The country was inhabited by Berbers. All that is known of the history of ancient Morocco, is that of the foreign settlements. The Phoenicians were the first to land on the coasts of Morocco, in the twelfth century.

In the Roman period, Christian evangelization began and in some cities the Latin and Christian way of life survived after the fall of the western empire.

Muslim armies from the east reached North Africa and Morocco in particular in 684. The Berbers who were mostly pagans, rallied to Islam, and took part in the conquest of Spain and the invasion of Gaul.

Following internal struggles between two great Berber tribes, the Sanhaja and the Zenata, an empire was formed by the Sanhajas. who founded Marakesh and created the first great Moroccan dynasty.

In the fifteenth century the Spanish began to assault the Moroccan coast and by the sixteenth century were masters of Ceuta, Tangier and Arcila, and had founded Agadir and Mazagan and had captured Safi and Azemmoun on the Atlantic.

The French Protectorate

In 1904 France succeeded in obtaining the recognition by Great Britain of her preponderance in Morocco. On the 30th of March 1912, the Treaty of Fez was signed with Maulay Abdul Hafiz, by which a French Protectorate was established over Morocco.

By the convention of Paris in 1923 an international statute of Tangier was established.

Though Morocco had lost her independence, her personality survived as well as the theoretical sovereignty of the Sultan over the whole territory.

The Moroccan nationalist movement was the beginning of a movement of reform; and in 1944 the claim of independence was advanced.

The Independence

In 1947 the affiliation of Morocco with the Arab world was proclaimed in Tangiers and legitimate national aspirations were demanded to be satisfied.

By the Declaration of La Celle St. Cloud on November 1955 France undertook to terminate the protectorate and recognize independence of Morocco.

Foreign Policy

Morocco's Foreign policy is based on non-alignment and Pan-Africanism. In July 1961 a protocol was signed between Algeria's Provisional Govenment and Morocco in which the two countries decide to «undertake the building of the Arab Maghreb on the basis of a fraternal association». But in October 1963 Algerian troops confronted the Moroccans when they moved forward into Tindouf and Colomb Bechar. A truce was arranged under the Charter of the Organization of African Unity by the Emperor of Ethiopia, but although both sides accepted arbitration no progress has been made to solve the basic conflict over their respective claims to the Saharan oil and mineral resources.

Morocco's African relations were also strained by the refusal to accept Mauritania's right to separate independence, an issue which strained Moroccan- Tunisian friendship. Morocco has, however, acceded to the Organization of African Unity despite Mauritania's membership of this association. Since 1963 Morocco's non-aligned policies seem to have become more westernly orientated.

The Arab-Israeli Conflict

In 1967 the effect of the Arab-Israeli conflict dominated Morocco's political and diplomatic life.

In 1969 Morocco laid claim to the Rio de Oro, in the Spanish province of Ifni. On January 4, 1969 and agreement for the cession of Ifni, on the Moroccan Atlantic coast was signed at Fez by the Moroccan Foreign Minister, M. Ahmad Laraki, and the Spanish Ambassador.

Internal Strife

After five years of direct rule by decree, King Hassan II decided in 1970 that Morocco should return to a modified form of parliamentary Government. On July 24 a revised Constitution, strengthening the authority of the King, was approved by 98. 7% of the 4.5 million voters in a national referendum. In 1971, the Moroccan monarchy suffered-but survived-the only serious threat to its existence since full independence in 1956.

The attempted coup was staged during a royal birthday party at the sea side palace of Skhirat. Trainees from the Ahermoumou military training school fired wildly at the royal guests, killing several ministers, army generals, civilian officials, and one foreign diplomat.

Thirteen months after the attempted coup by army officers of July 1971, attacks were carried out on August 16,1972, by Moroccan Air Force fighters on King Hassan's personal aircraft and, later the same day, on both Rabat airport and the royal palace in Rabat. The King escaped unharmed in spite of serious damage to his aircraft which landed safely, enabling some of the royal group to take refuge in the summer palace at Skhirat.

The trial of those accused of complicity in the attack on King Hassan on August 16 opened on October 17 before a military court at Kenitra.

In its verdict on November 7, the Court condemned 11 men to death, 5 men were sentenced to 20 years imprisonment, one to 10 years, three to five years, and 23 to three years, the remaining 177 being acquitted.

The Western Sahara

On 17 November, 1975 the 20th anniversary of Moroccan independence, King Hassan of Morocco was able to claim «our Sahara has been returned to us».

Under an agreement concluded on 14 November, Spain undertook to hand over the territory to joint Moroccan- Mauritanian control by the end of February 1976.

The last Spanish troops left the Sahara on February 26; the division of the territory between Morocco and Mauritania was formalised in April; and by September the Moroccan Army claimed total control of its sector.

On 8 March, 1979, however King Hassan announced the formation of a National Defence Council to deal with the Saharan crisis, a clear indication that the King had no intention of giving way on the Saharan issue, preferring instead to tighten support within Morocco.

By early 1982 little progress had been made towards holding the referendum in Western Sahara which had been proposed by King Hassan of Morocco at the Nairobi summit meeting of the Organization of African Unity (OAU) on June 26, 1981. The major problem facing the special implementation committee which had been established under an OAU resolution to arrange a referendum was Morocco's refusal to engage in direct negotiations with the Polisario Front, the guerrilla organization fighting for the independence of the self-proclaimed Saharan Arab Democratic Republic (SADR).

A new military dimension was given to the Western Sahara conflict when Polisario in late 1981 and early 1982 carried out attacks against Moroccan positions in Western Sahara using sophisticated tanks, and also shot down four Moroccan aircrafts with what Morocco alleged were advanced Soviet-made SAM-6 surface-to-air missiles. Mauritania, which withdrew from the conflict in 1979, rejected Moroccan accusations that the 1981 attacks had been launched from its territory.

A deep rift appeared in the OAU after a delegation of SADR was seated for the first time at the 38th Council of Ministers meeting in Addis Ababa on Feb. 22-28, — in protest against which the Moroccan delegation immediately walked out of the conference and was followed over the next two days by the following 18 countries: Cameroon, Central African Republic, Comoros, Djibouti, Equatorial Guinea, Gabon, the Gambia, Guinea (which announced on March 2 that it was suspending participation in the OAU), Ivory Coast, Liberia, Mauritius, Niger, Senegal, Somalia, Sudan Tunisia, Upper Volta and Zaire. Morocco also claimed to have the tacit support of Egypt, Nigeria, Sierra Leonė and Togo.

Relations with France

Despite Moroccan fears of a change in French policy towards the Government of King Hassan as a result of the election of a socialist government in France in May 1981, relations between the two countries continued to be close. Several issues did, however, arise in the period from mid-1981 which threatened to upset these relations.

There was concern in Morocco over the strengthening of relations between France and Algeria and over the French recognition of Polisario and of the principle of self-determination for the Sahrawi people in the Western Sahara.

These potential sources of disagreement did not, however, cause France to make any changes in its projected financial assistance to Morocco. During his visit to Rabat M. Delors confirmed both the granting of aid for 1982 to the value of about 1,300 million francs and also French financial support of Morocco's phosphate development programme amounting to an estimated F 6,000 million.

Student unrest

In both January-February 1981 and again at the end of the year serious student unrest occurred throughout Morocco, including strike action at various educational establishments.

The main cause of student discontent was the alleged failure of the Government to implement the university reforms proposed in a decree promulgated in 1975. Many of these reforms affected the organization of establishments of higher education and were designed to afford greater democratization and autonomy in the university system. When the 1980-81 academic year began in August 1980 there were student demands for revision of the entry procedure to end selection and make attainment of the baccalaureat the sole qualification for university entrance.

On Feb. 12, 1981, there was a strike at Moroccan universities called by the National Union of Moroccan Students (UNEM), it being reported that the majority of Morocco's 72,000 students had followed the strike call and that security forces had evacuated the campus of Fez University. About 40 students in the Faculty of Science at Rabat University (which was later closed by security forces) and 90 students at Fez were arrested on Feb. 13,

Riots in Casablanca

The greatest internal security problem facing the Government in 1981 arose from the strikes in June called by the "Union Marocaine du Travail" (UMT) and the "Confédération Démocratique du Travail" (CDT) in protest over large price increases decreed by the Government. Demonstrations which took place in Casablanca ended in clashes between demonstrators and security forces, and in the following months many participants in the Casablanca riots and other opponents of the Govenrment were arrested.

The price rises had been published in a government communiqué of the night of June 6-7 which stated that previously agreed rises in public subsidies on basic commodities would be halved. The effect of these cuts increased specific prices by between 45 and 90 per cent, while recent government measures had increased civil service salaries by only 13 per cent and the legal minimum wage by only 20 per cent. The cuts were introduced in order to comply with conditions laid down by the International Monetary Fund (IME) in approving (on Oct. 16, 1980) an extended arrangement authorizing Morocco to purchase up to the equivalent of 810,000,000 special drawing rights (SDR)- about US $ 1,070 million- over the succeeding three years.

The price rises had their most serious effect on the estimated 7,000,000 Moroccans (out of a total population of 20,000,000 living below the absolute poverty line (as defined by the World Bank), while the number of urban poor had been swelled by a rural exodus caused by the third consecutive year of drought.

THE CONSTITUTION (1972)

A new Constitution; providing for greatly expanded powers for the Prime Minister and Cabinet, increased responsibilites for the Chamber of Representatives, and a corresponding limitation on the very wide powers entrusted directly to the King by the 1970 Constitution was approved by an overwhelming majority in a national referendum on March 1, 1972.

Constitutional Provisions

The new Constitution, which was announced by King Hassan in a broadcast to the nation on February 17, 1972, contained the following principal amendments to the 1970 Constitution.

Parliament

While the unicameral system introduced in 1970 was retained, the Chamber would be elected for only four years (instead of six), and two-thirdsof the deputies would be directly elected by universal duffrage, with the other one-third being elected indirectly, i.e. by local Government assemblies, trade and professional organisations, and trade union representatives; the ration of directly to indirectly elected deputies laid down in 1970 would thus be reversed. The number of seats in the Chamber was to be fixed by an organic law, as in previous Constitutions.

The Chamber would have the power to initiate proposals for constitutional amendments, thus recovering a share in a right held solely by the King since 1970. Such proposals would have to be approved by a two-thirds majority of the whole membership of the Chamber, before being submitted by the King to a national referendum for final decision.

Parliament's other increased responsibilities would include specific power to legislate on the general statute of the Civil Service (instead of only Civil Servant's «fundamental guarantees»); electoral law; civil and commercial contract law; the creation of public establishments; nationalisation of industrial and commercial enterprises; transfer of public enterprises to private ownership; and outline laws (the French concept of Loi Cadre) on the State's fundamental economy, social and cultural objectives.

The Chamber would no longer be subjected to the previous procedure under which the King had powers to submit to a national referdum any Bill which after having been given a further reading at his request, had been passed or rejected by a two-thirds majority of the House. The Chamber would no longer be automatically dissolved in the event of a bill being approved in a national referendum after having been rejected by the Chamber.

The Chamber retained the power to overthrow the Government by refusing a vote of confidence, or passing a vote of censure, by a two-thirds majority of its whole membership.

Prime Minister and Cabinet

Nominated by the King, the Cabinet would remain responsible both to him and to Parliament, and would have all the powers necessary for the execution of its decisions, being specifically required to «ensure» implementation of legislation (instead of the previous requirement only to «supervise» implementation).

All major questions of Government- including declaration of war or of a state of siege, general policy statements, the Economic Plan and proposal for constitutional changes must be referred to the Cabinet by the Prime Minister before any decision could be taken.

The Prime Minister must submit a general policy declaration to the Chamber after the appointment of the Cabinet, and would personally «engage the Govenment responsibility» before the Chamber on either general policy or individual Bills. He received full general power to make statutory regulations on matters not requiring parliamentary legislation.

The Monarchy

The King retained, inter alia, the sole right to appoint ministers, to dissolve the Chamber and to declare a state of emergency- giving almost unlimited powers-in the event of a serious threat to the State's existence. As stated above he relinquished the sole right to initiate constitutional amendments, some of his powers to challenge parliamentary legislative decisions by appealing to a national referendum, and most of his direct governmental executive power.

The new Constitution reaffirmed changes in the provisions for the succession to the Throne which had been made by the 1970 Constitution had introduced the principle of hereditary succession by primogeniture in the direct male line, in 1970 the primogeniture provision was abolished, the Sovereign being empowered to choose his successor from among his sons.

JUSTICE

Although in theory the Qur'ān is the source of law, and the king is the spiritual head of the community, in effect the Qur'ānic jurisdiction, exercised by the cadis (Muslim judges who interpret and administer the religious law of Islam), is limited to matters relating to the personal status of Muslims; whereas rabbinical justice exists for Jews. All other matters, whether they concern Muslims, Jews, or others, are in the hands of the "modern" courts, which apply a code of laws inspired by the French. The various regional and local courts are beneath the three courts of appeal and the Supreme Court, which sits in Casablanca.

THE ECONOMY

Agriculture

Morocco produces a wide variety of crops. Out of a total of 7.6 million hectares of arable land, about 5.6 million hectares are cultivated. Pulses, mainly beans and peas, are the second most important crop in terms of land utilisation (586,00 hectares). Citrus groves are located along the Atlantic coast from Agadir to Larache (68,000 hectares). Sugar beets are cultivated in the irrigated areas of Tadla and Doukkala (58,000 hectares). It is estimated that about 100,000 hectares are planted in vegetables, with tomatoes and potatoes occupying 25,000 hectares. But while Morocco has for years been a successful exporter of certain agricultural produce, it has remained a net importer of other produce, notably edible oils, sugar and wheat. The authorities have launched a programme aimed at self-sufficiency in these products by 1984.

Animal husbandry accounts on average for about 1/3 of production in the primary sector of the economy. Since 1970 the herd size has averaged about 27 million animals, of which 16 million are sheep.

Mining

Morocco has about 40 percent of the world's known phosphate reserves, and is the world's second-largest producer. Other minerals include iron, lead, manganese, zinc, cobalt, and copper. Petroleum resources in the Rhab are being rapidly depleted, necessitating the importation of most of the crude oil processed by Morocco's two refineries. Domestic coal is a major source of fuel for the nation's power plants.

Manufacturing

Automobile assembly, textile spinning and weaving, and food processing are among the more modern industrial processes; textiles and processed food provide a surplus for export. The ancient Moroccan handicraft products, which include carpets, hand-tooled leather, and intricate metal work are also produced in sufficient quantity for export.

Development plan

The five-year 1978/1982 Plan laid before the National Assembly in November 1977 seeks to improve social and regional conditions; seven large regions have been marked out for investment in agriculture, tourism, health, education and house-building. Assuming a steady income from phosphates but bearing in mind a possible fall in remittances from emigrants, the Government is planning to finance over 60% (US $ 11,620 million) of total expenditure, a rise of nearly a half compared with the previous plan; the contribution of the private sector is likely to reach US$ 6,770 million.

Major projects are planned for the agricultural processing sector, petro-chemicals and engineering: these include the creation of an oil refinery in Jorf Lasfar, with an annual capacity of 4 million tonnes which is to go on stream in 1983-1984, and the French financing of a phosphoric acid plant of 500,000 tonnes per annum (Morocco-Phosphorus II). In the light of American competition and the impact of phosphates on foreign trade and payments, Morocco wants to develop the by-products from phospates. At present, locally processed phosphates represent only 10% of total production; the target aimed at is 30%. If the results of American and French tests are conclusive, uranium might be produced from phosphoric acid.

The financing of the Plan will require increased foreign borrowing. For example, the United States is currently considering the possibility of financing a programme to eliminate insanitary housing, while the World Bank may finance various other social projects in Douar Doum, Douar El Hajja and Ma'adid. France Granted FF. 1,150 million aid in 1978-an increase of 15%-for various industrial projects including a cement factory, an oil refinery, a spinning-mill, a sugar refinery, phosphate mining and fishing equipment.

EDUCATION

Enrolment at all levels of education in Morocco has grown considerably in the last decade. The most urgent need today is for modernisation, increased efficiency and higher quality to ensure that the sector will effectively produce an adequate supply of trained manpower for the private and public sectors of the economy - sufficient also to enable the gradual replacement by Moroccans of the great numbers of expatriates in middle and high level posts.

GEOGRAPHY

The Sultanate of Oman lies south of the Straits of Hormuz and is outside the Gulf. It has, however, a separate territory at the tip of the Musandam Peninsula overlooking the entrance to the Gulf, and its geographical and historical links with the United Arab Emirates are very close. In size it is much the largest of the states in the Gulf area, covering some 120,000 square miles with an estimated population of 865,000. Neighbouring countries, all to the west, are the Gulf Emirates, Saudi Arabia and the People's Democratic Republic of Yemen. The coastline, which is over 1000 miles long, faces the Gulf of Oman and the Arabian Sea.

The Sultanate generally is arid and barren but there are four relatively fertile areas - the Batina coast, which stretches north-west of Muscat towards the Musandam Peninsula, the valleys of the Jebel Akhdar (Green Mountain), other parts of the Hajar range behind the coastal strip, and the Salalah plain in the south-west of Oman. The mountains in the Dhofar region trap the monsoon rains and this small area was celebrated in ancient times as the only known source of frankincense in the world. The precious gum was taken to storage depots in the heart of the Sabaean-Himyaritic empire in the south-west corner of the Arabian peninsula, and was the basis of the wealth of such potentates as the Queen of Sheba. A «spice road» parallel with the Red Sea linked the Sabaean empire with the fabulous city of Petra in the modern kingdom of Jordan, which was the main distribution centre for the Mediterranean area. A city named Gerra, on the coast of modern Saudi Arabia, was the Gulf equivalent to Petra, and in the first millenium BC spice routes almost certainly existed through Oman from Dhofar to Gerra.

Public holidays (1983)

Mulid al Nabi - birthday of the Prophet (16 December); Eid al Fitr, end of Ramadan, month of fasting and self - purification (11-13 July); Eid al Adha, feast of the Sacrifice (17-20 September); Muslim New Year's Day, first day of AH 1403 (7 October); Ashura, day of mourning for Shi'ite Muslims (16 October).

Religion

About three-quarters of the population are Idahi Muslims, one of the strictest Muslim sects; the rest are Sunni Muslims.

The Idahis are small lithe people with the characteristic hawk-like nose and fine features, intensely tribal and independent, and in the past given to fierce tribal battles.

HISTORY

In the Middle Ages the seafarers of Oman were renowned, and Sohar, on the Batina coast, was the advance base of Gulf merchants trading in the Indian Ocean and with China. When the Portuguese rounded the Cape and sought to monopolize Indian Ocean trade, one of the first points they seized was Muscat, which they held for the best part of 150 years until driven out by the Omani Arabs in 1650. In the next century the Omanis resisted Persian invasions and conquered various Portuguese settlements in the Indian Ocean including Zanzibar, Mogadishu and Mombasa. The dynasty now ruling the Sultanate, The Al Bu Said family, was established in the mid-18th century. The British entered into the first of successive treaties of friendship with Oman in 1798 when they decided that Napoleon was too interested in the Sultanate as a possible stepping stone to India. Soon after this the long reign of the great Sultan Said bin Sultan began. He died in 1856, and a subsequent dispute between two son's was settled by the Canning Award of 1861 - an arbitration by the British Government which gave Oman to one son and Zanzibar to the other. Although provision was made for the payment of tribute by Zanzibar to Muscat, the loss of overseas territories and trade proved a serious matter economically and Oman became dependent on subsistence agriculture and fishing, and cattleraising in the south. This poverty and isolation has now been reversed by the discovery of oil.

The Ruler

The Ruler of Muscat and Oman,Sultan Said ben Taymur, was deposed on July 23, 1970, by his son, Qaboos ben Said, who installed himself as the new Sultan with the support of the other members of the Royal family.

Sultan Qaboos ben Said, who came to Britain when he was 16, was educated by an English Tutor before he came to Sandhurst; he was attached to the Cameronians for a year and later studied local Government for 12 months. He returned to Oman in 1966.

Guerrilla Network

In mid-January 1973, security forces in Oman discovered a network of cells of the communist Popular Front for the Liberation of Oman and the Arabian Gulf.

During a series of raids, the security forces seized «large quantities» of Chinese - made automatic rifles, small arms and explosives in Muscat, Matrah, Sur and Nazwa. It was not before December 1975 that Sultan Qaboos was able to declare that the rebels had been defeated and to hold a victory Parrade in the capital, Muscat.

Esternal Relations

Apart from tension with the People's Democratic Republic of Yemen (formerly South Yemen), Oman maintains good relations with its neighbours, and with Saudi Arabia in particular, from whom it receives major financial backing. Links with western countries continue to be extended. Domestically, since the end of the rebellion in March 1976 in the southern province of Dhofar, Oman's political climate has been stable.

Establishment of Consultative Assembly

A decree was issued by Sultan Qaboos bin Said on Oct. 18, 1981, providing for the establishment of a Consultative Assembly in Oman.

In his speech to the opening session of the Asembly on Nov. 3 Sultan Qaboos stated that its task would be "expressing views and giving advice on the general economic and social policies of the country", acting as "a framework for the joint effort of the two sectors, governmental and national" and studying "the objectives and dimensions of our development plans and the scheduled projects as well as the obstacles in the way of the implementation of such plans and the proper solutions for them".

Justice is administered in accordance with Sharia (Canon Law of Islam) by local judges or "Cadis".

Oil production accounted for 63% of Gross National Product (GNP) in 1974 with gross output increasing by 17% in 1975 and by 7.6% in 1976 to reach 18.6 million tonnes. Since then, however, because of the exhaustion of known fields, production has fallen back to 17.3 million tonnes in 1977 and registered a decline of 10%. in 1978. This trend continued up to the beginning of the 1980s when the Dhofar fields came on stream, raising production to 30.000 barrels per day (b/d). Production will be kept at this level until at least 1985, marking the end of the Second Five-Year Plan.

Estimated oil income from 1981 to 1985 is expected to be RO 6,376 million out of a total revenue of RO 6,947 million.

Another boost to Oman's economy has been the discovery of more natural gas reserves, estimated at 5,000 million cubic feet.

Oman's first natural gas project was completed in 1978 with a 331 km pipeline from Yibal in the interior to the Al Gubrah desalination and electricity generating complex.

By changing over to gas the al Gubrah complex added 2.1 million barrels to crudes exports in 1980.

By 1985, domestic gas donsumption is expected to increased to 129 million cubic feet as new industrial development projects (eg. the Sohar copper complex) will be using gas. By then savings in oil consumption will be about 7.9 million barrels a year. In addition, there are also large quantities of natural gas associated with oil production. Two plants to produce associated gas have been completed and another may be commissioned in 1974.

To offset the fall in oil production, the Government is backing the long-term development of three sectors where particular potential exists: fishing, mining (there are indications of several minerals, including chromium, coal, lead, zinc and nickel), and agriculture where agricultural processing industries are to be started to use the sector's output of dates, milk products, poultry and vegetables. Special emphasis is also being placed on extending irrigation and water supplies, increasing the use of fertilisers and encouraging farmers to adapt to modern methods. The Government has also set up several experimental farms which are already proving a success.

Among the most recent mining and industrial projects is a joint venture between the Oman Government (75%) and a Canadian American company involving the mining of copper deposits, thought to be extensive, in Sohar; the total cost is assessed at US. $ 120 million, of which 80% is to be financed by Saudi Arabia. Production started in 1980 with an initial output of around 20,000 tonnes of 98% refined copper, of which the major part is exported to European countries and to Japan. Two other point ventures are with Kuwait, one for a US. $ 100 million cement factory and the second a petrochemical complex. In addition, a fishing agreement has been arranged with a South Korean company, providing for the Government to retain 30% of the catch.

To stimulate economic development in general and industrial production in particular, the Omani Government has taken a 40% share in the Oman Development Bank, the other partners are the Kuwait Foreign Trading Contracting and Investment Company (10%), Omani firms and individual members of the public.

The Oil Sector

Petroleum Development (Oman) Ltd - P.O.Box 81, Muscat; is jointly owned by Oman Government (60%), Shell (34%), CFP (4%) and Partek (2%), Elf-Sumitomo- Wintershall- are engaged in exploration activities in West Central Oman at Butabul. Ownership: Sumitomo (32%)-Elf-Acquitaine (48%) - Wintershall (20%).

Quintana International Ltd is exploring in north western Oman in the Sunainah area. Two wells: one dry - one gas.

Elf-Acquitaine Oman are drilling off the Musandam Peninsula. Ownership: Gulf Musandam Petroleum Ltd, a subsidiary of Gulf Oil Corporation holds 45% of the Company's share; Elf-Acquitaine (52.25%) - Cluff Oil Inc (2.5%)

Sun Oil Group are engaged in exploration activity in the off-shore concession area from Masirah Island to Kuria Muria Islands.

BP., AGIP, Demines and Hispanol Group are carrying out exploration activities in the area that had been relinquished by PDO in the south.

The Mining Sector

It has long been known that certain minerals exist in undeterminded quantities in the mountains of Oman, particularly high-grade copper which has been mined in small quantities for use by local craftsmen over many centuries. One spectacular wadi in the mountains near Nizwa is called the wadi of minerals in Arabic because of the traces of different minerals that are evident there, notably lead, zinc, chrome, iron, nickel and magnesite. Chromite reserves, estimated at two million tons exist on the coastal side of Djebel Akhdar

Industry

Industrial production covers: cement, fertilizers, flour milling, rubber, petrochemicals and soft drinks.

Joint ventures include: a copper smelter (US $ .20 million) project to be carried out in conjunction with a U.S. company, and an Oman-Kuwait petrochemical complex estimated to cost US $ .250 million.

Agriculture

Some 80 percent of the working population lives off the land. About 18,000 hectares are sown to dates. Other crops include lime, lucerne, melons, bananas and onions.

With the large expansion in government financial operations and the accompanying growth of the domestic economy, the number of commercial banks rose from 4 in 1972 to 20 in 1977, the limit set by the Central Bank in 1976; the number of bank branches has reached 145 in 1981. In March 1977, the Central Bank required newly established banks to have a minimum Omani ownership of 51 per cent and instructed the six locally incorporated banks to have such an ownership pattern. It has also encouraged banks to establish branches in areas lacking banking facilities. Since 1975, The Central Bank has conducted annual bank examinations and has recently set up a system for centralized monotoring of credit risks. Other institutional developments include the establishment in July 1977 of the Oman Housing Bank, which replaced the National Housing Development Association, and the Oman Development Bank, which began operations in January 1979. Main objectives of the latter are (1) to advance or guarantee medium-term and long-term loans to Omani companies for financing development projects in industry, agriculture, petroleum, mining, and fisheries, and (2) to participate in the capital of Omani joint stock companies or underwrite the issue of their shares to the public.

Qatar occupies a peninsula of approximately 4,000 square miles that projects true north into the Arabian Gulf for about 1000 miles and has an approximate maximum width of 55 miles.

There are also some small offshore islands. Those permanently settled include Halul, important as the storage centre and tanker terminal for two seabed oilfields.

Qatar's landward frontiers at the neck of the peninsula lie with the Kingdom of Saudi Arabia to the west and the Shaikhdom of Abu Dhabi to the east. Riyadh, the northern Saudi capital, lies 250 miles due west behind the Jafura Desert, and Abu Dhabi port 150 miles to the south-east - where the equally vast Rub al-Khali Desert (the so-called Empty Quarter') runs to the Gulf along an ill-defined shore of shallow inlets, reefs and shoals.

The State's nearest seaward neighbour is the Bahrain Islands to the north. Their capital, Manama, is 100 miles from Doha, although only 20 miles separate the two territories at the narrowest part of the channel running between them in the Gulf of Salwah. The eastern Iranian shore of the Gulf is 120 miles off Qatar's rounded northern extremity, and the nearest Iranian port, Bushire, is 250 miles from Doha.

The Peninsula is, for the most part, flat and barren, but with special beauty of a desert landscape and the sea nowhere very far away. Along the southern half of the western coastline a chain of low limestone hills marks the "Dukhan anticline", Qatar's oilfield. Such natural vegetation as there is appears mainly in the north, around wells and small wadis. In the south of the Peninsula a topographical feature is the string of salt flats across the neck of land from Salwa to Khor al Odeid. This suggests that Qatar may have been an island at some time in the remote past.

Climate

Qatar lies outside the area of the south-western monsoons and its seasons generally conform with those of the temperate zone lands. The weather in the winter months of December, January, February and March is relatively cold for the latitude. But humidity is frequently excessive.

Towns

Doha (pop. 160,000), the capital, is the seat of the Qatar Government and the commercial and financial headquarters of the State. A decade or so ago its was a sleepy fishing village; now it is a thriving town with wide and well-lit streets crowded with traffic under automatic light control, modern airconditioned shops, parks and gardens, and numerous public buildings.

Qatar's second town is Khor, overlooking a narrow and deeply indented bay about 28 miles due north of the capital and linked to it by a metalled road.

Public holidays (1983)

Eid al Fitr (11-13 July); Independence Day (3 September). Eid al Adha (17-20 September); Islamic New Year 1404 (7 October); Prophet's Birthday (16 December); Accession of Shaikh Khalifa (22 February).

Note: the beginning of each Muslim feast is determined by a sighting of the moon. When a holiday falls on a Friday, it is customary for the authorities to declare Saturday to be a holiday.

Religion

Islam is the dominant religion of the population, indegenous and migratory alike.

Most Qatari are Sunni Moslems of the Wahabi sect, the more numerous and most orthodox of the two main Islamic streams, and as such regard exact obedience to the tenets of the "Koran" (The Moslem Holy Book) as a sufficient guide for moral and social purposes.

Language

The official language of the State is Arabic, although much Government business is conducted in English and most senior Qatari departmental officials are fluent in that language.

HISTORY

Recent excavation by a Danish archaeological team has revealed evidence of the occupation of the peninsula in the Stone Age and it is probable that there have been settlements on the coast for many centuries.

Qatar had few visitors from the European world until well on into the present century. The Danish traveller Carsten Niebuhr has "Gattar" on his mid-18th century map but the detail is quite inaccurate. The first European to have travelled into the interior seems to have been the German, Hermann Burchardt, in 1904. The British expelled an Ottoman garrison from Doha early in the First World War, and Qatar entered into treaty relations with Britain in 1916 whereby Shaikh Abdallah Ben Jassim al-Thani, the then Ruler, agreed not to enter into relations with other foreign powers nor to alienate Qatari territory without British consent.

He abdicated in 1949, just when the Shaikhdom was first gaining its new wealth. He was succeeded by his son, Shaikh Ali ben Abdallah al-Thani, whose rule of little more than 10 years ended in 1960 - again by abdication, with the agreement of the ruling family.

Overthrow of Ruler

The Ruler of Qatar, Shaikh Ahmad ben Aly ben Abdallah al-Thani, was deposed in a bloodless coup by his cousin, Shaikh Khalifa ben Hamad al-Thani, early on February 22, 1972.

Ties with the Arab World

Under the rule of Shaikh Ahmad ben Ali al-Thani, Qatar saw great developments, particularly with the Arab World.

Relations with Saudi Arabia were friendly, as were also those with Iran. The links between Qatar and Dubai were strengthened in those years and the official visit of Shaikh Issa al-Khalifa to Doha in March 1967 helped towards the solution of questions outstanding between Qatar and its closest Arab neighbour.

In the same decade Qatar also played a larger part in common Arab Affairs. Its application for membership of the League of Arab States was formally approved at a meeting in Cairo on September 11, 1971.

Qatar is a full member of the Organisation of Petroleum Exporting Countries (OPEC), the Organisation of Arab Petroleum Exporting Countries (OAPEC), the Arab Union of Broadcasting Services, and the Arab Union of Tourism; and an associate member of the World Health Organisation (WHO), the International Bureau of Education in Geneva, Unesco, and the United Nations Food and Agricultural Organisation.

THE JUDICIAL SYSTEM

Qatari justice is administered by a Civil Court (Adlia) and a Sharia Court, both situated in Doha.

The Civil Court operates under the sole judgeship of the Deputy Ruler in his capacity as Chief Justice, on the traditional basis of "justice, equity and good conscience" in all cases where no specific enacment applies.

The Sharia Court, presided over by a Qadi, deals with such matters as inheritance, marriage, divorce, public morality and family relationships under Islamic laws. It also reports back to the Deputy Ruler on cases remitted by him from the Civil Court for purposes of religious guidance or assessment.

Most prosecutions brought by the police force go to the Civil Court in the first instance.

In accordance with the conventions of Arab society, punishment is rarely pronounced by either court before the offender has admitted his guilt and indicated satisfaction with the hearing accorded him in mitigation.

The most common form of punishment for offences against lawful authority, public morality, the person, property and the anticontraband laws is short terms of imprisonment. Fines, payment of compensation, or deportation normally apply to contraventions of the traffic, municipal, gaming, labour and immigration regulations.

The tendency is to reserve the death penalty for certain categories of murder by persons over the age of 18. Execution is by military firing squad.

Qatar once depended for its living almost entirely on its pearling fleet. The development by the Japanese of the cheap cultured pearl in the early 1930 was a severe blow to the Qatar econmy, and there was a period of acute poverty until oil brought a new prosperity.

Hydrocarbons

Oil is crucial to the economy, accounting for 99% of export earnings, over 90% of government revenue and more than half of Gross National Product (GNP). However, by global standards Qatar's oil production is modest, representing less than 1% of world output and only 1.5% of OPEC production. Proven oil reserves are estimated at 5.6 billion barrels, sufficient for over 30 years at current rates of production. Production in 1979 amounted to 24.7 million tonnes but declined to 23.0 million in 1980- down by 4.3%, representing 0.3% of world total, and 0.7% of OPEC total.

Production is expected to decline from the next decade onwards reflecting the maturity of the oil fields. In addition, export availability will be curtailed as domestic consumption rises five fold by 1990. Although oil exploration work has continued, results so far have been disappointing and the prospects are not promising.

The sole small refinery has not been able to cope with local requirements. Accordingly, a new 50,000 b/d refinery is to be built which will meet the country's projected needs up to 1990.

In the long term the emphasis of Qatar's hydrocarbons sector is expected to switch an off-shore field of non-associated gas- the North West Dome- which is believed to have reserves possibly as high as 100 trillion cubic feet, equivalent to some 18 billion barrels of oil, roughly three times Qatar's existing proved reserves of oil.

A significant industrial development was achieved early in 1980 with the inauguration of the Petrochemical Complex and Natural Gas Liquid Plants at Umm Said, built at a global cost of approximately US$ 1,300 million. They are the first of their kind in the Gulf. The petrochemical unit is designed to produce 280,000 tonnes of ethylene and 150,000 tonnes of low density polyethylene a year, and there is also a unit for the production of sulphur as a by-product.

The natural gas liquids plants have a combined installed capacity of 2,400 tonnes of propanemal, 750 tonnes of butane, 1,500 tonnes of condensate, 9,000 cubic feet of methane-rich gas and 2,500 cubic feet of ethane-rich gas per day.

The Qatar steel company (QASCO)- the first in the Gulf opened in April 1978 and is currently operating at above its rated capacity of 400,000 tonnes of billet a year. About 90% of the 450,000 tons of construction bars produced in 1980 was exported principally to Saudi Arabia and the United Arab Emirates.

Qatar Fertilizer Company produced over 100,000 tons of ammonia and 627,000 tons of urea in 1980, representing 86 per cent and 95 per cent of full capacity.

Qatar is concerned about the lack of co-ordination is developing capital-intensive industry in the Gulf and fears that an overproliferation of such industry is almost inevitable. For example, it has deliberately refrained from aluminium production and building a dry dock because of capacity in neighbouring states.

Agriculture

Considerable strides in agriculture have been made in recent years, suggesting that the declared aim of self-sufficiency could eventually be attained. Since the early 1960s the number employed in the sector has tripled to reach 10% of the population the area under cultivation has increased tenfold, and a similar rise has been recorded in the volume of production. Indeed. between January and May each year Qatar is now virtually self-sufficient in fruit and vegetables (tomatoes, egg-plant, cabbages and barley), and even exports small surpluses. Modern water-saving techniques and other measures are being investigated and could raise the output of certain vegetables by a factor of 20 to 30.

Infrastructure

The pace of development is impressive. Health and education have become major priorities.

A 640-bed general hospital was completed in 1979 and twenty new clinics are being built.

Meanwhile, expansion of the university is under way, and there are plans to increase the number of schools.

The housing crisis has been effectively solved by the extensive construction of prefabricated units though some shortage will persist at Umm Said as the industries there expand.

Port delays have been virtually eliminated as a result of the recent port expansion programme.

Demand for electricity, which is free to Qataris and heavily subsidised for non-Qataris, has been increasing at a rapid pace, moving from 225 megawatts to 525 megawatts in 1980.

A second earth satellite is planned to relieve pressure on the existing station and improve communications with the rest of the world. Also planned is a microwave project to provide direct telephone and television links with Saudi Arabia.

An experimental project for the utilisation of solar energy is also on the drawing board and is expected to cost QR 10 million.

GEOGRAPHY

The Kingdom of Saudi Arabia comprises about nine-tenths of the Arabian Peninsula in the extreme southwest of Asia. On the north, it is bounded by the Gulf of Aqaba, Jordan, Iraq and Kuwait; two neutral area along the northern frontier are administered jointly. The southern neigbours are Yemen, South Yemen and Oman; except for a mountain ridge on the Yemenite border, the boundary is not marked. On the east are the Arabian Gulf, Qatar and Oman. The Red Sea provides the boundary on the west.

Estimates vary between 500,000 and 895,000 square miles depending on how much is included of Rub al Khali, the Empty Quarter or Great Sandy Desert in the south. The forbidding desert wastes reduce the habitable area of the country by between 150,000 and 250,000 square miles.

Regions

Saudi Arabia is divided into four main geographical divisions: Najd, high country in the heart of Saudi Arabia; al-Hijaz, an elongated shelf region along the upper Red Sea coast; Asir, in the southern Red Sea-Yemen border area; al-Hasa, or Eastern province, the sandy and eastern part of the country.

The Capital

The capital of the Kindgom of Saudi Arabia is Riyad, the seat of the House of Saudi since the destruction of the family's old capital of ad-Dir'iyah, which stood a little farther up Wadi Hanifah, by the army of Muhammad Ali of Egypt in the early nineteenth century. A virtually new city has evolved from and been superimposed upon the old fortified town and Riyad's new palaces, public buildings, mosques, schools, hospitals, boulevards and parks are rapidly replacing mudbrick buildings and narrow lanes. Most of the ministries and other agencies of the central Government. which were once located in Mecca and Jeddah, are now in Riyad. Their moves were made possible by improved transportation and communications connecting Riyad with other parts of the Kingdom and the rest of the world.

The Holy City

Mecca, the holiest city in Islam, has been the capital of the Hijaz for many years. The city contains the sanctuary of the Ka'bah, toward which all Muslims face at prayer. Mecca was the birthplace of the Prophet Muhammad and the scene of his earliest preaching . In addition, Mecca is a flourishing commercial centre.

The Illuminated City

Sharing with Mecca the honour of being one of the Holy cities of Islam is Medina, the full name of which is al Madinah al Munawwarah (the Illuminated City). The original name of the city was Yathrib. After the Prophet migrated from Mecca and set up the government of the Islamic state there, it became pre-eminently «The City» and received its new name, which it has retained ever since. Medina was the southern terminus of the Hijaz Railway, built in the days of the Ottoman Empire before the First World War.

The Red Sea Port

The port of Jeddah, situated on the Red Sea, less than 50 miles from Mecca, is the most important commercial centre in western Arabia. Most pilgrims to Mecca and most imports into the Hijaz enter the Kingdom through Jeddah. Many business concerns, including foreign consultants and banks, have offices there. The city has a modern seaport and a modern airport, both of which attract much international traffic. Foreign embassies and legations are required to be based at Jeddah, with the sole exception of the US Consulate General in Dhahran. There are no diplomatic or consular offices in the capital.

The Summer Capital

North of Jeddah on the Red Sea is the town of Yanbu', which serves as a port for Medina. Scattered up and down the coast are other ports, of which Jaizan, near the Yemen border, is probably the most active. High up in the mountains above Mecca is Tayif, a very old town and a popular summer resort. The Royal Court usually spends a part of the summer at Ta'if. At that time this spot becomes a second capital.

The Twin Cities

Next to the capital Riyad, the greatest urban centres in Najd are the twin cities of' Unaizah and Buraidah, which lie within 15 miles or so of each other in the district of al-Qasim. These cities are one of the main arteries of trade and travel between central Arabian, on the one hand, and Iraq and Kuwait, on the other. Off to the north-west of 'Unaizah and Buraidah is Hayil, the metropolis of Jabal Shammar. South of the twin cities, the valleys breaching the escarpment of Tuwaiq are sprinked with oasis settlements.

Pools and Gardens

The populous district of al-Kharj is the site of an important agricultural development, about 50 miles southeast of Riyad. Near the headquarters of the project is the oasis of al-Yamamah, a name which was applied to a wide area in the interior of Arabia during ancient times. The largest oasis and the capital of the district is ad-Dilam, situated between a group of springfed pools and gardens of the north and a solitary pool, Khafs Daghrah, and its dependent gardens to the south. Many oasis settlements are found to the south of al Kharj in Sha'ib al Far', al Aflaj and Wadi ad-Dawasir

The Largest Oasis

Probably the largest oasis in Saudi Arabia is al-Hasa, in the Eastern Province, which has sixty or more springs, four of them very large, and which is famous for the quality of its dates. There are approximately 200,000 inhabitants in al-Hasa, about 83,000 of them in the town of Hofuf, about 39,000 in the town of al-Mubarraz, and the remainder in over fifty villages and hamlets. Hofuf used to be the capital of eastern Arabia, and is still and important administrative centre.

Dammam, about 10 miles north of Dhahran, is the eastern terminus of the Saudi Government Railroad. Most of the construction materials and heavy machinery destined for Riyad are imported through Dammam. Since 1953 Dammam has been the capital of the Eastern Province.

Ten miles up the coast from Dammam is the Qatif oasis, with an estimated population of 50,000. The town of Qatif, has a port, now little used except by fishermen, and a population of approximately 10,000. Farther northwest along the coast of the Arabian Gulf, between Ras Tanura and Ras al-Mish'ab, is the port of Jubail, which was the first headquarters of the Aramco geologists in their search for oil.

The Oil Centres

The oil industry has established three large centres at Dhahran, Abqaiq and Ras Tanura, as well as several smaller ones. Dhahran, the headquarters of Aramco, is centrally located in the Dammam oil field. Dhahran is also the location of the largest international airport in Saudi Arabia and an American Consulate General. The Abqaiq community, about 40 miles southwest of Dhahran, lies in the great oil fields of the same name. The peninsula of Ras Tanura, which is the site of the Company's refinery and oil shipping terminal is about 25 miles by air and 45 miles by road north of Dhahran.

The Trade Centre

Seven miles east of Dhahran is the trade centre of Al Khobar. The town's merchants and craftsmen cater to the Western tastes of Aramco employees, who find there a large variety of American and European clothing, household goods and luxury articles. The Al Khobar area has a population of approximately 60,000, of whom 10,000 live in the town itself.

Population

The great majority of the inhabitants are Arabs although there are small ethnic groups especially those who have entered the country on pilgrimages or to work in the expanding oil industry. Recent estimates indicate that 50 per cent of the total population is nomadic or semi-nomadic, 20 per cent settled cultivators and 30 per cent urban dwellers.

Almost all Saudi Arabs, regardless of their racial origins, have at least two characteristics in common: they speak Arabic and they are Muslims. They do not all speak the same dialect of Arabic. They do not all belong to the same sect within Islam. The Shi'ites of eastern Arabia comprise a groupe of fair size within the predominantly Sunnite population.

Not all Arabs meet the genealogical qualification of a blood line traceable back through the ages to one or the other of two ancestors. The Bedouins of the desert are regarded commonly as the chief repository of this pure stock, but even they admit that their tribes have absorbed non-Arab strains on occasion. Also, whole tribes are of non-Arab descent, such as the Sulabah of northern Arabia.

The coastal towns and the oil industry's installations have the highest proportion of foreign elements in Saudi Arabia. Mecca, where pious Muslims from all over the world have chosen to live and die, also has a very heterogeneous population.

The Bedouins

The life of the Bedouins naturally differs from that of their settled countrymen. Their occupations as herdsmen keeps them moving back and forth over the desert. Their homes are tents, because of the need for a portable shelter, but the design of these tents provides a maximum of shade and ventilation.

Model Settlement Scheme

Under the Faysal Model Settlement Scheme launched in 1965 by the Ministry of Agriculture the Bedouins are expected to be gradually brought round to a more settled way of life on reclaimed land irrigated by artesian wells and distribution canals. Early in 1971 the scheme was ready to receive its first bath of settlers after the network of asphalt roads, linking production and marketing centres, had been opened to traffic.

Climate

Saudi Arabia has a desert climate. In Jeddah, it is warm and humid for most of the year. Temperatures seldom rise above 38 degrees C (100 degrees F) but the high humidiy, which can often exceed 90% (particularly in September) can be very tiring. Even during the short winter season-December to mid-February- it is never more than chilly by European standards. The prevailing north-west winds, blowing in from the sea for most of the year, does much to relieve the heat.

Riyad, the capital, being far inland, has more of a continental climate, i.e. much hotter than Jeddah in mid-summer, but colder in midwinter. Temperatures in June, July and August can reach 49 degrees C (120 degrees F) in the shade, and in some years, drop to near freezing point in December and January. Humidity is low, and the summer climate is therefore less tiring than that of Jeddah. Occasional heavy rainstorm, which may occur any time between November and April, and particularly in December and January, can disrupt air services; owing to the lack of adequate drainage,traveling the area is an uncomfortable process in wet weather.

The climate of the Eastern Province is similar to that of Riyad except that high humidity is often encountered during the summer. Another characteristic of the area is the «shamal» a north wind producing uncomfortable duststorms

Administrative Divisions

Najd: Capital Riyad. Najd is subdivided as follows:

(1) The principality of Riyad, to which are associated Wadi al-Dawasir; al-Aflaj; al-Hariq; al-Kharj; al-Aridh; al-Washm and Suair.

(2) The principality of al-Qassim, comprising Unaizah, Buraidah, ar-Ras and their villages and al-Mudhannab and its dependencies.

(3) The Northern principality (Capital Hayil). This includes the tribes of Shammar, Anzah, ad-Dhafir and Mutair, the town of Taima in the south and some northerly towns.

Hijaz: Capital Mecca. Includes the principalities of Tabuk, al-Ula, Dhala, Al-Wajh, Amlaj, Yanbu, Medina, Jeddah, al-Hith, al-Qunfundhah, Baljarshi and Tayif

Asir: Capital Abha. Includes Abha, Qahtan, Shahran, Rijal Alma', Rijal al-Hajr, Bame Shahr, Mahayil, Bariq and Bisha.

Najran and its villages Eastern province (Al Hasa): Capital Dammam. Includes Hofuf, Al Mubarraz, Qatif, Dhahran, Al-Khobar and Qaryat al-Jubail.

Official public holidays (1983)

The weekly holiday is Friday although many retail shops remain open on that day. The followong public holidays are observed when all Government and business offices are closed.

The history of modern Saudi Arabia begins probably from October 18, 1932 when by the royal decree of King Abdul Aziz II Ibn Saud the dual kingdom of Hijaz and Jajd with its dependencies, administered since 1927 as two separate units under slightly different systems, was unified under the style of the Kingdom of Saudi Arabia.

Until 1926 when Ibn Saud had finally extended his power over the whole of inner Arabia, the country had remained in almost complete isolation from the rest of the world. The only foreign countries with which Ibn Saud was acquainted were Turkey and Great Britain, but the conquest of the Hijaz had brought him into contact with other powers, and the new circumstances compelled him to take stock of his situation.

The USSR took the lead both in recognising the new status and in raising its consul general to ministerial rank, Britain and France did the same at discret intervals.

Ibn Saud was not late to realise that the progress and stability of his regime would depend largely on cooperation with the west, particularly in the technical and economic fields.

On the home front he used both tactful persuation and, when necessary, force to crush opposition to his projects from the hard core of irreconciable elements: the Wahhabis.

The political events of the years 1932-1960 can be briefly summarised. In 1934 Ibn Saud was involved in war with Yemen over a boundary dispute, but within six weeks Saudi Arabia had pierced through to Hudaida and the campaign ended in the treaty of Taif. The frontier was duly agreed and demarcated after which the relations of the two countries became cordial. During World War II Ibn Saud declared his neutrality, though his personal bias in favour of the western allies was never in doubt. In 1945 he declared war on Germany and was thus able to take his country into the United Nations Organization. He also joined the Arab League of which he and his successors always remained the most cordial of supporters. On November 9, 1963, he died in Taif, at the age of 73, after a long and distinguished reign.

The New World

It was his eldest surviving son Saud Ibn Abdul Aziz, who ascended the throne, while his second brother Faysal was proclaimed heir apparent. The opening years of the reign were concerned with domestic policy and economic development, in which respect great progress was undoubtedly made. There was an enormous increase in the population of Riyad and Jeddah. International airports at Jeddah and Dhahran, and a large one at Riyad emphasised the significance of Saudi Arabia in the new world. Roads, schools, hospitals, mosques, palaces, and, blocks of flats sprang up like mushrooms. Financial difficulties were largely overcome, trade was booming, revenue was buoyant, and government servants were lavishly paid, contented and ambitious.

The Mixed Blessing

The oil boom which set in 1951 was to prove a tremendous boost to Saudi economy. But it was a mixed blessing. Inexperience, extravagance and even corruption, sparked off an orgy of ill-conceived spending. Unable to stem the tide, King Saud issued a decree in March 1958 transferring all executive power to Faisal who soon introduced a regime of austerity. The currency position was restored to equilibrium and efforts were made to dampen the extravagance and corruption which sudden wealth had fostered.

During 1962 relations with Egypt became worse when the two countries took opposing sides in the Yemen civil war. On October 17, the King recalled Faisal (who earlier had been forced to resign), and on November 6, relations with Egypt were severed.

In March 1964 King Saud was stripped of all power, and on November 2 the Council of Ministers and the consultative council jointly declared him deposed and proclaimed Faisal king.

Internal Security

Throughout 1966, the Government strengthened internal security by deporting Arabs, mostly Egyptians and Palestinians.

In reponse to President Nasser's threats to occupy Saudi towns, the US State Department reiterated on May 4 that the US was committed to the defence of Saudi Arabia.

The Arab-Israeli war

The Arab-Israeli war in June 1967 transformed relations with Egypt which hardly had been worse right up to the eve of the war. The general antagonism between President Nasser and King Faisal was heightened by acute tension over Yemen when an Egyptian army still propped the Republican Government and the Saudi Government complained that Egyptian Intelligence was organising terrorism inside its country.

Some 20,000 Saudi troops were stationed in Jordan but they took no part in the war. On June 7, the Saudi oil wells were closed off and exports halted in accordance with Arab policy but on 12 June exports were resumed to all countries except Britain and the United States.

At the conference of Arab foreign ministers and economic ministers in August the Saudi delegates favoured resumption of oil shipments and after the summit conference's decision in favour of it, pumping was restored to all customers on 15 September 1967.

When King Faisal agreed at the summit conference to contribute £ 50 million to the £. 135 million fund for the aid of Egypt, Nasser and Faisal agreed to end all intervention in Yemeni affairs.

Diplomatic Efforts

From 1968 onwards Saudi diplomacy was marked by continued effort to promote stability in the Gulf area through the formation of a federation of Gulf Emirates, by improved relations with the Yemen (Sana'), and by closer ties with President Anwar Sadat's regime.

In June 1971, King Faisal visited Cairo, where he had wide-ranging discussions with President Sadat. The result was a strong Saudi-Egyptian entente despite the King's pronounced anticommunism and Egypt's close relations with the Soviet Union. Throughout his reign King Faisal exercised a patient diplomacy among the Arab states; he was watchful that no interim steps towards peace in the Middle East should dilute the Arab position on Palestine; he remained adamant that East Jerusalem should return to Arab hands; and had frequent meetings with President Sadat (whose moderating influence had received his blessings) and with the PLO chairman Yasser Arafat. He had also gone some way towards improving Arab unity by an agreement with the United Arab Emirates over old border dispute and by meeting with Colonel Khadafy of Libya. For more than twenty years he had presided over the Council of Ministers, and done much to enhance Saudi Arabia's prestige both with the Arab states and abroad.

Death of King Faisal

The news of the death of King Faisal on 25 March, 1975 by a disgruntled nephew, Prince Feisal Musaid ibn Abdul-Aziz, hit the Arab World like a bombshell. After an exhaustive investigation, during which it was established that he was not unbalanced that there was an external involvement, he was publicly beheaded in Riyadh in June.

Saudi Arabia's role as a mediator in inter-Arab conflicts war pursued by King Feisal's successors, Prince Khaled who took the throne, and Prince Fahd who had already exercised the functions of Prime Minister, notably between Iraq and Syrian in their dispute over the waters of the Euphrates, and later between Egypt and Syria and in their disagreement over interim settlements with Israel.

Occupation of the Grand Mosque

On Nov. 20 1979, the first day of the new (15 th) Moslem century some 200-300 armed persons took control of all major points of the Grand Mosque during the dawn prayer. The Mosque (Al-Haram) which encloses the shrine of the sacred black stone (Kaaba), is the centre of the Moslem world and the most important centre of pilgrimage for Moslems, and contained an estimated 50,000 pilgrims at the time of the seizure.

Responsibility for the seizure of the mosque was claimed in Nov. 27 by a group calling itself the "Moslem Revolutionary Movement in the Arabian Peninsula".

Following the armed occupation, a total of 63 persons were beheaded on Jan. 9, 1980 on the instructions of Saudi Arabian religious courts, In addition, 19 further death sentences were commuted by the courts to terms of imprisonment, 23 women and children were sent to corrective institutions and 38 persons were acquitted of charges connected with the occupation, while 102 of the insurgents died during or after the incident.

Death of King Khaled

King Khaled ibn Abdul Aziz died of a heart attack on June 13, 1982, at the age of 69, and on the same day the Saudi royal family confirmed the succession of his half brother, Crown Prince Fahd (61), A statement issued from the royal palace declared that "the royal family headed by Prince Mohammed ibn Abdul Aziz has taken the oath of allegiance to His Majesty King Fahd". (Prince Mohammed was the eldest surviving son of King Abdul Aziz but had renounced his claim to the throne). Owing to King Khaled's poor health throughout his reign much executive responsibility had already been assumed by Prince Fahd.

King Khaled, the fifth son of King Abdull Aziz ibn Saud, had succeeded to the throne after the assassination of King Feisal (his half brother) in 1975, having been named as Crown Prince and Deputy Prime Minister on the latter's accession in 1964. He had suffered from heart trouble since 1970, undergoing open-heart surgery in the United States in 1972 and again in 1978, and during his reign there had been repeated rumours that he might abdicate.

The new King undertook the responsibility of Prime Minister (previously held by King Khaled) and was replaced as First Deputy Prime Minister by his half-brother Prince Abdullah, the Second Deputy Prime Minister and Commander of the National Guard, who was also named as Crown Prince by the royal family. The post of Second Deputy Prime Minister was taken by the Minister of Defence, Prince Sultan, a full brother or King Fahd.

THE CONSTITUTION

Saudi Arabia is an independent monarchy under the predominant religious influence of the Sunnite Wahabi sect of Islam. Its only formal written constitutional law is a set of Organic Instructions established for the governing of al-Hijaz in 1926 and a decree of October 1935, amplified by later regulations, setting up a Council of Ministers.

Although the monarch is the centre of the Saudi government his power is limited by restrictions of custom and convention as well as law. In essence the government is based on traditional forms of law and institutions and it operates according to principles deeply embedded in the consciousness and understanding of the people. Such institutions and principles function as a constitution in a broad sense and tend to give greater strength and stability to the existing political other than could be achieved through lip service to a formal constitution.

The Council of Ministers

The structure and functions of the Council of Ministers were redefined by a royal decree issued on May 12, 1958. It is now composed of a Prime Minister appointed by the King, a deputy-prime Minister, and Ministers appointed by the King. Ministers without Portfolio and royal counsellors may be appointed to the Council of Ministers.

Members of the Council of Ministers are responsible to the Prime Minister who, in turn, is responsible to the King. The Prime Minister can ask the King to relieve any member of his duties. The resignation of the Prime Minister means the resignation of the entire Council.

The Council of Ministers is responsible for the budget and is the supreme authority under the King in financial matters. It has been given wide authority over the supervision of regional and local government. International agreements must be approved by the Council of Ministers, then by the King. Twothirds of the members form a quorum; decisions are by a majority vote; the Prime Minister has a deciding vote in case of a tie. The King has vast power over the decisions of the Council of Ministers, but the Prime Minister may adopt any measure he sees fit if the King takes no action within thirty days.

The Cabinet

The Council has a Cabinet composed of four divisions: the Secretariat General, the Experts Division, the Office of the Comptroller of State Accounts, and the Grievances Board.

The Ministries

Ministries in Saudi Arabia are a recent innovation. As the central government expanded its functions, built railways and schools, took an interest in agriculture, established a postal and telecommunications system, and developed a permanent organised defence - it was found necessary to establish Ministries on what was a remote approach to the Western model.

A position of peculiar importance is occupied by the Ministry of Finance and National Economy. According to the royal decree of August 9, 1954, every governmental agency concerned with budgetary expenditures must have a representative at the Ministry of Finance on its staff to audit and supervise its financial transactions.

The Judiciary

The establishment of an organised judicial system to cover the whole country is one of the great achievements of the Saudi regime. In some places local Emirs and tribal shaikhs still act as judges, but the organised judiciary consists of a body of cadis appointed centrally by the chief cadi in Riyad.

In recent years sacred law has been supplemented from time to time by royal decrees to meet such situations as those arising from industrial accidents. An example of decree law is the vehicle code, which governs traffic violations. Offences which in the government's view pose a threat to public order may also fall within the province of decree legislation.

The Court System

The organization of the courts is basically uniform throughout the country, but administrative details vary from province to province. They are generally presided over by a cadi appointed from the head-quarters of the chief cadi in Riyad. In small territorial units the local Emir may act as judge. In the larger towns higher courts deal with more serious cases. In al-Hijaz their verdicts may be appealed to courts of appeal or to the Judicial Supervisory Committees situated in Mecca. In the Eastern province an appeal from a cadi's decision is referred to a council of cadis and from there to the mufti in Riyad, the head judicial figure.

At the pinnacle of the Judicial system is the King, who may act as the final court of appeal and as a source of pardon.

The handling of cases in Saudi courts is usually expeditious, and the judges have a reputation for incorruptibility and for accuracy in apportioning guilt. There is considerable faith - even on the part of foreign observers - in the essential fairness of Sharia procedures.

Tribal Government

Over half the population is still tribally organised, and even settled people in villages and towns still maintain their tribal connections. Tribal shaikhdoms are hereditary in certain families, but there is no principle of primogeniture. It is assumed, as a rule, that the best qualified leader among the male members of the eligible family will succeed to the shaikhdom. The consultative principle is an integral part of the rule exercised by the tribal Shaikh.

The development of the economy under the second five-year plan (July 1975 - June 1980), has been rapid. In the first two years real GDP rose at an annual rate of 12 %, compared with the plan target of 10.2% per annum for the five year period although lower world demand for oil restricted growth in the 1977/78 fiscal year to 7 %. In view of the government's longer term aim of moving the economy away from an overwhelming reliance on hydrocarbons towards a more broadly based industrial structure, the strong performance of the nonoil sector has provided particular encouragement. Problems of congestion, manpower shortages, inflation and lack of supplies have been even greater than expected but are now being overcome, following the considerable emphasis which has been given to the development of the infrastructure. Roads, ports and desalination plants have been built so that rapid industrial growth can take place. At the same time the planners have taken care to ensure that the effect of economic development upon traditional Islamic culture has been kept to a minimum.

Oil and gas

This sector accounts for about half the nation's GDP, much of its government revenue and virtually all of its exports. Production has varied considerably in recent months as world market conditions have changed. The Oil glut of much of 1978 turned into a shortage by the New Year as Iran supplies were cut off and demands from the West rose as the especially cold winter occurred. Crude oil production was accordingly raised from 7.75 million barrels a day (mbd) during the first half of 1978 to almost 10 mbd by November, so bringing the average for the year up to the budgeted level of 8 1/2 mbd. A higher average of 9 1/2 mbd was temporarily fixed for the first quarter of 1979 with production exceeding 10 mbd during certain periods. However, in response to the partial resumption of Iranian supplies the authorities announced in April 1979 that production would return to the original ceiling of 8 1/2 mbd.

During 1980 production amounted to 9.9 million bpd-up by 3.8% on 1979. The rise occurred largely in the last quarter of the year to offset partially the shortfall in world supply resulting from the virtual cessation of exports from the war zones in the Arabian Gulf.

For 1981, oil production had reached 9.8 million bdp, 0.8% lower than in 1980. During the first six months of 1981 production averaged 10.2 million bpd as against 9.8 million in the comparable period of 1980. At the end of August, it was cut by one million barrels as a good will gesture designed to strengthen OPEC position in world markets. Following the unification of prices by OPEC members, production was curtailed further tp 8.5 million bpd as from November 1981.

Saudi Oil Production

Year	Total Production	Daily Average	% Growth
1978	3,038.0	8.32	—9.6
19769	3,479.2	9.53	+14.5
1980	3,623.8	9.90	+3.8
1981	3,586.0	9.82	—0.8

Proven oil reserves at the end of 1980 amounted to 113.5 billion barrels according to Aramco (Arabian American Oil Company) which is responsible for 98% of the nation's oil production.The governement is seeking to conserve resources and is continuing to take closer control of the oil sector. The long-expected final takeover of the remaining 40% stake that four American oil companies still have in Aramco is likely to take place shortly, though the firms will continue to lift the oil and explore for further supplies on behalf of the Saudi National Oil Company..

In addition to oil, gas reserves are estimated at 68.8 trillion billion standard cubic feet; current plans for development could make Saudi Arabiathe world's leading exporter in natural gas liquids. About three-quarters of gas production, which is almost all associated with the lifting of crude oil, has until recently been flared off. Now a gas-gathering system is being constructed at a cost of around £ 14 billion designed to collect 3,29billion cubic feet of currently flared gas each year.

INDUSTRY

In furtherance of the aims of the second development plan, the Saudi Arabian Basic Industries Corporation (SABIC) was set up with the task of undertaking joint ventures with private firms in order to establish primary industries. Much of the industrial development is planned at Yanbu on the Red Sea and at Jubail on the Gulf where a vast port will serve an industrial complex covering, initially, some 66 square miles. Planned industries include a wide range of petrochemicals, refineries, metal manufacture, fertilisers, as well as materials for the construction industry.

In 1980, 337 new industrial plants began production. In the same year the Ministry of Industry and Electricity issued licences for 426 planned industrial projects or expansion of existing factories. The authorised capital of projects licensed in 1980 amounted to Rls 31 billion including the capital of the SABIC joint ventures in the petrochemical sector.

The authorities announced in February 1979 new tax incentives aimed at encouraging foreign investment. These provide for a doubling of the tax holiday from 5 to 10 years for approved new joint ventures outside the petroleum, banking and trading sectors. Such projects will require a minimum 25% Saudi participation and will be subject to the approval of an investment committee, preference will be given to ventures which broaden the industrial base and transfer some expertise to local manpower.

External trade

Export consist almost exclusively of crude or refined petroleum and were valued at 375.8 billion riyals in 1981. Imports, on the other hand, increased by about 22 per cent in 1981 to 135.3 billion riyals against 110.8 billion in 1980.

As whole, the country presents a harsh environment, part of it being semidesert. The northern coastal plains, which stretch from the Gulf of Tadjoura (Tajura) along the Gulf of Aden into Mijirtein region, are particularly arid, and from their scorched appearance in the dry seasons are known locally as guban ("burned"). Inland this barren coastal strip gives place to the maritime range, the Ogo Highland (Surud Ad, near Erigavo, 7,894 ft. (2,406 m), running from Afars and Issas parallel with the coast and descending gradually southward into the vast tilting Haud Plateau. This plateau has an average height of 3,000 ft. (900 m) in the centre but rises much higher in the Harar highlands to the west in Ethiopia. The highlands slope gradually and fairly regularly from the northwest and are intersected by low-lying plains and valleys which are much more widely spaced in the south than in the precipitate north. The Juba River and the Webi Shbeli contain water all the year round and provide the main river system of the whole area. Both rivers descend from the Ethiopian highlands.

Population

The Somali population of 5,000,000 gives an overall Somali density of about 11 persons per sq. m. (4 per sq. km.), but in parts of the country, such as the Mijirtein region, the density falls to less than half that figure. There are also about 80,000 somalized Bantu and Negroid inhabitants, concentrated between the two main rivers, about 50,000 Arab, Persian, Indian, Pakistani, Eritrean, and Ethiopian immigrants, and about 4,500 Europeans, mainly Italian.

Climate

From June to September, especially, the northern coast is unbearably hot and virtually deserted. Berbera and Bender Kassim have average maximum temperatures of 42°C (108°F) and 40° (104°), respectively, with a minimum of 21° (70°).

The largest towns are: Mogadishu, capital of the republic; Merca or Merka and Hargeisa and Berbera, capital and port of the Northern regions, respectively.

Religion

Islam is the State Religion

From their connection with the Ethiopian hinterland, their proximity to Arabia, and their export of precious gums, ostrich feathers, ghee (clarified butter), and other animal produce, as well as slaves from farther inland, the northern and eastern Somali coasts have for centuries been open to the outside world. This area probably formed part of Punt, "the land of aromatics and incense", mentioned in ancient Egyptian writings. Between the 7th and 10th centuries, immigrant Muslim Arabs and Persians developed a series of trading posts along the Gulf of Aden and Indian Ocean coasts. Many of the early Arab geographers mentioned these and the sultanates that grew out of them, but they rarely described the interior of the country in detail. In fact intensive exploration really began only after the occupation of Aden by the British in 1839 and the ensuing scramble for Somali possessions by Britain, France, and Italy.

The Imperial Partition

About the middle of the 19th century the Somali Peninsula became a theatre of competition between Great Britain, Italy, and France. On the African continent itself Egypt was also involved and later Ethiopia, expanding and consolidating its realm under the guiding genius of Emperor Menelika II. Britain's interest in the northern Somali coast followed the establishment (1839) of the British coaling station at Aden or the short route to India. The Aden garrison relied upon the importation of meat from the adjacent Somali coast. France sought its own coaling station and obtained Obock on the Danakil coast in 1862, later thrusting eastward and developing the Somali port of Djibouti. Farther north, Italy opened a station in 1869 at Aseb which with later acquisitions became the colony of Eritreast. Stimulated by these European maneuvers Egypt revived Turkey's ancient claims to the Red Sea coast. In 1870 the Egyptian flag was raised at Bulhar and Berbera, but with the disorganization caused by the revolt in the Sudan, however, Egypt was obliged to curtail its colonial responsibilities, and evacuate Marar and its Somali possessions in 1885.

Establishment of the Somali Republic

During World War II the British Protectorate was evacuated (1940) but was recaptured with Italian Somalia in 1941 when Ethiopia was also liberated. With the exception of French Somali land, all the Somali territories were then united under British military administration. In 1948 the Protectorate reverted to the Colonial Office; the Ogaden and the Haud were gradually surrendered to Ethiopia; and in 1950 the Italians returned to Somalia with ten years to prepare the country for independence under a United Nations trusteeship.

Taking advantage of the modest progress which the British military administration had effected, the Italians rapidly pursued social and political advancement, although economic development proved much more difficult. The effect of these changes was naturally felt also in the British Protectorate, which, in the event, became independent on June 26, 1960. On July 1 Somalia followed suit and the two territories joined to form the Somali Republic. On July 12 Abdirashid Ali Shermarke was nominated prime minister.

In 1967 Shermarke (replaced as prime minister by Abdirazak Haji Husain in 1964) was elected to the Presidency and Muhammad Haji Ibrahim Egal became prime minister. The new government achieved a detente with Ethiopia and Kenya in disputes caused on the one hand by the Somali government's refusal to recognize Ethiopia's rights to the Ogaden and to grazing lands as set out in the Anglo - Ethiopian Treaty of 1897 and the agreement of 1954, and, on the other hand, by the failure of the independent government of Kenya to accede to the wish of Somali tribesmen in the north-eastern area of Kenya to join.

A further general election in March 1969 led to the entrenchment of the government's Somali Youth League, with Muhammad Haji Ibrahim Egal reappointed as prime minister. This result left many people dissatisfied, and led to a situation of increasing public unrest accompanied by increasingly autocratic acts on the part of the president and the governmet. On Oct. 15, 1969, the president, Shermarke, was assassinated by a policeman while on a tour of the Northern Region. The ensuring rushed attempts by the prime minister to secure the election to the presidency of his candidate formed the immediate background against which the army and the police seized power on Oct. 21. Ministers and a number of other prominent people (including the former commander of the police) were placed under arrest, and parliament was dissolved. A supreme Revolutionary Council was then set up and announced that it would replace corruption and tribal nepotism with justice and restore to the republic its democratic heritage while securing real social and economic progress. The republic's name was also changed to the Somali Democratic Republic.

Political scene (1970-1980)

The objective of a "Greater Somalia", involving the annexation of Somali-inhabited areas of South-East Ethiopia and North-East Kenya, has been pursued since independence in 1960. It led to increasingly overt Government support for the Western Somali Liberation Front in the Ogaden culminating in the military debacle in the spring of 1978 when Cuban-backed Ethiopian forces overwhelmed the Somali army. This defeat led both to political unrest in Somalia when an attempted coup took place and to an influx of refugees from the Ogaden, said to number half a million. The political situation has eased following Government initiatives designed to consolidate popular support for the regime and the resumed guerilla activity in the Ogaden has brought part of that area under rebel control. There has been a peace initiative by the Somalis but this has evoked little response from Ethiopia, and the situation remains tense.

The war has also led to a dramatic shift in international alliances. The gradual increase in the reliance on the Soviet Union during the 1970s, which paralleled the development of the economy along socialist lines, came to an abrupt end in late 1977 when the Soviet Union made it clear that they were supporting Ethiopia in the Ogaden. The United States moved quickly to assist Somalia. China is also taking an interest and Saudi Arabia is providing financial help.

The flow of refugees into Somalia from the Ogaden continued into 1979. About half a million people have been reported to have entered the country, of whom 150,000 are or have been in the care of authorities in camps and elsewhere at a cost to the Government of $ 10 million up to February 1979. The United Nations has provided $ 4 million worth of food, shelter and equipment and the United States $ 6 million in food aid; there have also been contributions from some EEC countries and the Middle East.

Developments from mid-1980 to mid-1982

President Mohammed Siyad Barre announced a reorganization of the Government and the leadership of the ruling Somali Revolutionary Socialist Party (SRSP) on March 1, 1982, and at the same time lifted the state of emergency which had been in force since Oct. 21, 1980. The declaration of a state of emergency had been accompanied by the reintroduction of the Supreme Revolutionary Council, which had been established in 1969 following President Siyad Barre's assumption of power and dissolved in July 1976.

Other major developments in the period up to July 1982 included (i) the formation in October 1981 of a Somali Democratic Salvation Front (SDSF) by three oppositions groups; (ii) an alleged army mutiny and clashes between troops and demonstrators in Northern Somalia in the early months of 1982; and (iii) a sharp escalation of fighting on the Somali-Ethiopian border in mid-1982, between Somali forces on the one hand and SDSF guerrillas backed by substantial contingents of Ethiopian troops on the other.

A US State Department spokesman confirmed on July 24 that the United States had begun airlifting military equipment to Somalia "in connexion with the recent incursion by Ethiopia and Ethiopian-backed forces". It was later stated that this emergency military aid was limited to rifles, ammunition and communications equipment and did not include anti-aircraft guns and radar as had earlier been suggested.

Diplomatic relations

On Aug. 25, 1981, the Somali Government broke off diplomatic relations with Libya and gave Libyan embassy officials 48 hours to leave the country. Mogadishu radio reported that this decision was taken in view of the "continuous conspiracies of the Kadhafi regime against the Somali people and its participation in the constant and unjustified provocations, attacks and aggression against the Somali Democratic Republic".

Relations between Somalia and Kenya, which had deteriorated following the signing in December 1980 of a joint Ethiopian-Kenyan communiqué on "Somali expansionism", improved in June 1981 when President Siyad Barre and President Arap Moi of Kenya signed a co-operation accord which ended several years of hostility between the two countries.

The improvement in relations between the two countries was preceded by a Somali offer of economic co-operation, made by Dr. Hussein Abdulkadir Quasim, then Somali Minister of Mineral Resources and Water Development, who was reported by Mogadishu radio on June 17 as having told Kenyan television that Somalia was prepared to participate in economic cooperation between the countries of the Horn of Africa.

Other recent developments in Somalia's foreign relations included (i) a tour of West Africa by President Siyad Barre in June 1981, which included the signing on June 5 of a co-operation agreement with Nigeria (covering economic, scientific, technical, cultural and educational fields), and visists to Benin, Ivory Coast and Sudan; (ii) an announcement by Signor Emilio Colombo, the Italian Foreign Minister, on Aug. 6, 1981, that Italy would provide over $ 200,000,000 in aid to Somalia (the package including a new three-year economic and technical co-operation agreement and an increase in food aid); (iii) an announcement on Feb. 1, 1982, that Portugal and Somalia had established diplomatic relations at ambassadorial level; and (iv) the expulsion of Mr. Dimiter Yanakiev, the Bulgarian chargé d'affaires, who was given 48 hours to leave Somalia on March 28, 1982, because of his "interference in internal security".

THE CONSTITUTION

Somalia's Constitution is a lengthy document. Its main points:

"Every citizen shall be free to participate in an assembly or demontration... The citizen shall further be entitled to express his opinion in any manner, publication, or speech" (Art. 24). "Every Somali who has attained the age of 21 years shall be eligible for election as a deputy to the People's Assembly". (Art. 60).

"Every Somali whose parents are of Somali origin, who shall not have married a person not of Somali origin, has fulfilled the condition for election to the Assembly, and has attained the age of 40, may be eligible for election to the Presidency of the Somali Democratic Republic" (Art. 81).

"Political institutions elected at all levels shall function in accordance with the principle of collective deliberations, majority decisions, and collective responsibility in execution". (art. 9)

"Every citizen shall be entitled to participate fully in political, economic, social and cultural activities in accordance with the Constitution and laws" (Art. 20)

"Every citizen shall be entitled to work. Work is a duty, honour, and the foundation of a socialist society". (Art. 21)

"Every citizen shall have the right to free education" (Art. 23).

"Private ownership shall be guaranteed by law, which shall define the modes of acquisition and forfeiture, and the contents and limits of its enjoyment for the purpose of safeguarding its social function." (Art. 28)

The Constitution in Article 3, affirms Islam as the State religion of Somalia and adds: "Somali is the language which all Somalis speak, and through which they recognise each other; Arabic is the language which links the Somali people with the Arab nation, of whom they are an integral part, and the two languages shall constitute the official languages of the Somali Democratic Republic".

Article 15 states: "The Somali Democratic Republic shall firmly uphold the principle of self-determination of peoples and fully supports the national liberation movements, and all peoples fighting for their freedom and independence".

Other articles note that the policy of the Republic is one of positive neutrality in which is enshrined a full recognition of the principle of peaceful co-existence of all the peoples of the world.

Article 16 affirms that: "The Somali Democratic Republic, adopting peaceful and legal means, shall support the liberation of Somali territory under colonial occupation, and shall encourage the unity of the Somali people through their own free will".

Under Article 18 a commitment is made to promote: "a policy of cooperation among all peoples and States based on mutual benefit, equality and respect for the independence and political system peculiar to each people."

The Judicial System is con ,osed of: the Supreme Court, the Military Supreme Court, The Security Court, two Courts of Appeal in Mogadishu and Hargeisa; eight Regional Courts and 84 District Courts. A religious judiciary also exists in the form of government-appointed Qadis administering the Sharia in matters of personnal status such as marriage, divorce, inheritance (in the towns), and the assessment of physical injuries.

Almost three-quarters of the population are nomadic herdsmen who obtain their subsistance from the herding of camels, sheep and goats and, principally in the South, cattle. Most of the rest of the population is engaged in settled agriculture between the Juba and Shebelle Rivers. Livestock products and bananas form the bulk of exports, the former having moved ahead since the meat processing plant at Kismayu achieved capacity production in 1973.

The main emphasis of the 1974-8 Development Plan was on the continued expansion of the agricultural sector, agro-industry and exports; parallel development of the infrastructure was designed to open up new areas for such growth. This Plan has been followed by a three year Plan to run until 1981 at a cost of SS. 7 billion. The emphasis on agriculture is to continue with 37 projects envisaged, costing a total of SS. 1,600 million with another SS. 1,300 million allocated to animal husbandry, fishing and irrigation schemes. The remainder will be used to finance research into the exploitation of iron and gypsum deposits, which are known to exist, and to develop transport, communications and education. The latter will include a continued literacy drive which has achieved a dramatic success in the two decades since independence. As with its predecessor the new Plan relies heavily on external financing.

Since the 1969 revolution, state farms and agricultural cooperatives have been set up, all major industries nationalised and export marketing organised through government agencies. Although commercial activities involving small units have been exempted from nationalisation and the need for private foreign investment has been recognised, private overseas capital has been and will continue to be a minor factor in the nation's development.

Economic dislocation arising from the War has recently retarded economic progress. The departure of Soviet staff led to the closure of factories, shortages led to a rapid rise in prices and Ethiopian bombing has caused considerable damage, notably in some northern towns. Meanwhile the cost of looking after the refugees is a continuing drain on resources.

Agriculture and Fishing

The pastoral sector, despite its primitive nature, remains vital to the economy in that it supports a majority of the population and provides over two-thirds of all exports in the form of live animals, skins, butter and canned meat. Livestock products have overtaken bananas as the principal export and government assistance has been forth-coming in the form of a Livestock Development Agency, the building of modern slaughter houses and the development of a complex of irrigated modern feed lots in the lower Juba area where cattle can be prepared for export. However, the sector remains vulnerable to drought as the 1974 crisis showed when 30% of all livestock was lost and a quarter of a million nomads were made destitute.

Over half of the victims of the drought were resettled in the South and the main aim of the government's agricultural policy is now to provide a secure and economic farming base there. Italian collonists initially developed this area, and created banana plantations whose products were sold on the italian market, where they still have preference. Now some 70,000 hectares are under cultivation producing other fruits mainly for local consumption together with maize, sorghum, sugar cane and cotton. However, there is an estimated 7¹/² million hectares suitable for cultivation and the scope for agricultural development is therefore substantial. The first priority under the Development Plans has been to achieve selfsufficiency in foodstuffs; this should shortly be achieved in sugar with the opening of another plantation complex by the nationalised sugar undertaking and various projects are designed to eliminate foodgrain imports, including experiments in rice growing, with Chinese aid. In both cases it is hoped to produce a surplus for export. Meanwhile cotton production has yet to reach a level sufficient to satisfy the needs of the local textile factory.

To develop the drought-prone central rangelands an international aid package worth over $ 45 million has recently been announced. Contributors include the International Fund for Agricultural Development, the World Food Programme, the International Development Association, The United Kingdom and the United States. The project will extend the improvements already made in the northern range-lands, financed largely by the Kuwait Fund for Arab Economic Development, and will concentrate on developing new water supplies, setting up co—operative farms and teaching herd management to the half million inhabitants who are mainly nomadic.

Until seven years ago fishing was confined to a few small subsistence groups along the coast. Since then over a score of fishing co-operatives have been set up and a fleet of 70 vessels provided, with aid from Soviet Union. The Current Plan allocates over $ 42 million to 20 fishing projects, including fish-curing plants, equipment for fishing co-operatives, a training school for fishermen, a research centre and a boatbuilding programme.

Industrial and Mineral Development

Manufacturing industry makes only a small contribution to the national economy. By far the largest section is agro-industry, including food processin such as the manufacture of dairy products, canned meat, fish, fruit, refined sugar, vegetable oils and fats. Textiles, handicrafts and the manufacture of light consumer goods are also important.

Somalia has been prospecting for oil for more than two decades and, despite favourable geological indications, no oil has yet been discovered. However a refinery with a productive capacity of one thousand barrels a day has been built-sufficient to meet domestic needs and to provide a small surplus for export. Exploitable deposits of bauxite, iron, quartz, manganese, tin and gypsum are thoutht to exist, while exclusive rights have been granted to an Italian Company to prospect for uranium deposits. Commercial mineral production on a relatively small scale is at present confined to salt, charcoal, limestone and meerschaum.

Stabilisation Programme

Following the completion of the 1981/82 programme, a new stabilisation plan was adopted in mid-1982, supported by the Fund with an18-month standby arrangement covering the period through the end of 1983. In this context, on July 1,1982 several keymeasures on the supply side were taken: the dual exchange rate system was unified, the Somali shilling was devalued by 21% on the export side and by 51% on the import side in domestic currency terms, and the pegging of the Somali Shilling was changed from the US dollar to the SDR.

Moreover, the authorities remain committed to dismantling public enterprises that are not viable. A public evaluation unit within the Ministry of Finance has been established to review these enterprises.

The Republic of the Sudan is the largest country in Africa with an area of 2.5 million square kilometres, or 8.3% of the area of Africa and 1.7% of the land area of the world. It extends from the Egyptian border at lat. 220 North over a distance of approximately 1,400 miles, as far south as lat. 40 North. The east-west distance is about 1,200 miles. On the east the Sudan has boundaries with Ethiopia, and on the south Congo, while on the west it has common border with Chad, the Central African Republic and Libya. Its coastline extends over 400 miles.

The Sudan is watered by the Nile, which is formed by the confluence at Khartoum of the white Nile from Lake Victoria and the Blue Nile from Lake Tana. The northern part of the country starting just below the Tropic of Cancer down to some 300 kilometres south of Khartoum has a rainfall of less than 180 mm per annum and agriculture of all kinds is dependent upon irrigation. Further south the annual average rainfall increases to 500 mm or more, so that crops can be grown after the summer rains.

Urban Centres

The Sudan is a very lightly urbanised country, having about 12% of its population living in towns and cities. The bulk of the country urban population is concentrated in a few principal cities of which the «Three Towns» are the most important.

Foremost as an urban centre is Khartoum, which has come to dominate the Sudan only really in the last century and a half. Before 1800 it was very small indeed, but its growth arises from a central position in what is now by far the richest zone of the country- the Central Clay Plains - and centre of routes by rail, road, river and air.

Across the river from Khartoum is Omdurman, larger in size than Khartoum and traditionally more of an «Islamic» centre and a focus of nationalist interests, this deriving to some extent from the presence of the Mahdi and his political supporters. Whilst Omdurman, longer established as a large town, became increasingly residential, Khartoum became the centre of British rule, and drew in, because of its better communications, a number of industrial and commercial activities.

The next larger town is Port Sudan, which has grown from tiny beginnings since about 1900. Previously, Suakin was the main sea outlet for the Sudan, but a restricted harbour site and difficult seaward approach through coral reefs led to the decision to create a new port some 65 kilometres further north. Port Sudan is on a well developed «sharm».

Population

With a rate of natural increase of about 2.7% per year, the Sudan has one of the fastest growing population of the world. If the present rate of growth is to be maintained, the population of the Sudan is expected to double within the next 30 years.

The population is divided into three main categories: Sudanese, foreigners with Sudanese nationality, and aliens.

The Sudan comprises Arabs (40%), Nilotic or negroid peoples (20%) Western tribesmen (14 %), Beja (including the Hadendowa 6 %), Nuha (Arab negroid 5.5 %), Nilo-Hamitic peoples, including Ethiopians(5%), and Sudanic peoples, a negroid group (5%).

Religion

No census of religion has yet been taken in the Sudan. The population of the six northern provinces is almost entirely Muslim (Sunni) apart from a few small areas of pagans and from the Christian communities, mostly in the towns. In the three southern provinces there are Christians and Muslims, but the majority are pagans.

The Christian elements are not numerically imposing; they include about 250,000 Catholics of Latin or the various oriental rites, a few thousand each of Greek Orthodox, Armenians, and Copts, perhaps 100,000 Protestants, and a few hundred Jews.

Official holidays (1983)

Independence Day (January 1); Bairam (February 5-9); New Year (A.H.) (February 26); Martyrs Day (March 29) ; Ach-Sharikein (April 11); Sham an—Nassim (April 19); May Day (May 1); Prophet's Birth (Dec. 16); 25 May Revolution (May 25); 21 October Revolution (October 21); Id al-Fitr (July 11-13); Christmas (December 25).

HISTORY

Man has lived in the Sudan for at least one million years and the valley of the Nile which wanders more than 4,000 miles from the lakes of central Africa to the Mediterranean, may well be the cradle of civilisation, rather then the Euphrates. About four centuries before Christ the ox-driven waterwheel which still plays a vital role in the country's economy, was introduced to the Sudan. At the same time came camels, brought with them by the Persians when Cambysses invaded Egypt in 525 BC.

Homer knew of the Sudan and his countrymen visited it, as they still do, to barter cloth, wine and trinkets for gum arabic, spices and slaves. Nero sent a reconnaissance expedition far up the river but the commander's experience with the «sudd» (Arabic for obstruction), a vast and impenetrable papyrus swamp in the southern Sudan, dissuaded the emperor from any thought of conquest. During the reign of Justinian, many Sudanese kingdoms were converted to Christianity and churches dotted the sweep of Nile until the spread of Islam in the XVIth century.

Modern Sudanese history owes much to Napoleon. It was the victory in 1797, at the battle of the Pyramids which shook the power of the Mamelukes, the Caucasian ruling class of Egypt, and paved the way for the rise to power of the Albenian soldier of fortune Muhammad Ali.

Muhammad Ali sent his third son Ismail at the head of 10,000 men across the desert and, by 1821, all of north and central Sudan was his. For the first time, the Sudan-the name means «Land of Blacks» - began to take shape as a political entity.

Salvation was to come from the desert. Muhammad Ahmad, the son of a Dongola boat-builder, was born in 1844. He grew into a soft-spoken mystic and soon retired to Aba Island, 150 miles south of Khartoum, to live the life of a religious recluse, proclaiming himself in 1881 to be the Mahdi, the second great prophet. The tribes of the west rallied to the Mahdi's call for a war against the infidels and despots and, early in 1884, the Mahdi was master of all the Sudan save Khartoum.

Britain, who meanwhile had moved into Egypt, resolved that the Sudan could not be held and sent General Charles Gordon to evacuate Khartoum. No man could have been more ill-fitted for the job, and after 317 days the Mahdi's dervish hordes overran the city's defences and razed Khartoum.

Five months after the fall of Khartoum, the Mahdi died of typhus; he was succeeded by Khalifa Abdallah. Hardly had he come to power when the Sudan was plunged in a series of civil wars.

In September 1898 the Anglo-Egyptian force led by General Herbert Kitchener met the Khalifa's 60,000 warriors on an open plain outside Omdurman, the new Sudanese city built across the Nile from Khalifa's casualties comprised 10,800 killed and 16.000 wounded, and Kitchener entered Omdurman as a conqueror.

On January 19, 1899 Britain and Egypt signed a condominium aggreement under which the Sudan was to be administered jointly. In the twelve ensuing years, the Sudan's revenue had increased seventeenfold, its expenditure tripled, and its budget reached a balanced state which was to be maintained until 1960.

Mounting Egyptian nationalism in the period after World War I culminated in 1924 in the assassination in the streets of Cairo of Sir Lee Stack, Governor - General of the Sudan; British reaction resulted in the expulsion of all Egyptian officials from the Sudan.

After the Anglo-Egyptian «entente» of 1936, a few Egyptians were allowed to return to the country in minor posts. But the signing of the 1936 agreement stimulated Sudanese nationalists who objected both to the return of the Egyptians and to the fact that other nations were deciding their destiny. Expression of this feeling was seen in the formation of the Graduates' Congress, under the leadership of Ismail al-Azhari.

Political Parties

By 1945, two political parties had emerged. The National Unionist Party led by al-Azhari, demanded union of the Sudan and Egypt; il had the support of Sayed Sir Ali al-Mirghani, head of a powerful religious sect. The Umma Party, backed by Sayed Sir Abdur-Rahman al-Mahdi demanded unqualified independence and no links with Egypt.

End of Condominium

On February 12, 1953, Britain and Egypt signed an accord ending the condominium arrangement and agreeing to grant Sudan selfgovernment within three years. The agreement also provided for a senate for the Sudan, a Council of Ministers, and a House of Representatives, elections to which was to be supervised by an international commission.

The elections, which were held during November and December 1953, resulted in victory for the NUP, and its leader, Ismail al-Azhari, became the Sudan's first Prime Minister in January 1954. The replacement of British and Egyptian officers in the Sudanese civil service by Sudanese nationals followed rapidly.

Independence

On December 19, 1955, the Parliament voted unanimously that the Sudan should become «a fully independent sovereign state». British and Egyptian troops left the country on January 1, 1956; the same day a five-man Council of State was appointed to take over the powers of the governor-general until a new constitution was agreed.

Two years, later, on 17 November 1958 a bloodless army coup led by General Ibrahim Abboud toppled the Government of al-Azhari. On his assuming power, General Abboud declared that he would rule through a thirteen member army junta and that democracy was being suspended in the Sudan in the name of«honesty and integrity».

Trouble in the South

In 1966, Sadik al-Mahdi, the 30 year old President of the Umma Party, took over as Prime Minister. Internally the security situation in the southern Sudan continued to cause anxiety; successive Prime Ministers visited the South in April and October but neither threats nor blandishments succeeded in curbing the rebels.

The Ministry for Southern Affairs sought to restore normal life to those parts of the southern provinces under government control, but there was little or no security in Equatoria Province and the armed forces launched a major offensive against the rebel camps there in October 1970.

The war ended officially in March 1972, when Colonel Numeiry signed a peace pact with Major-General Lagu, the Leader of the Anya-Nya rebels in the south.

The key clause in the agreement provided for regional autonomy for the south. On May 8,1973, Colonel Numeiry signed Sudan's first permanent constitution, which enshrines the Addis Ababa accord for an autonomous southern region within a united Sudan.

Internal Turmoil

In July 1976, President Numeiry survived the most serious threat so far to his eight-year-old regime. A coup attempt, masterminded by former finance minister Hussein al-Hindi and former prime minister Sadik al-Mahdi, both in exile, and heavily backed by Libya's Col. Muammar al-Kaddafi with arms and money, involved the infiltration of some 2,000 heavily armed civilians into Khartoum and Omdurman. The rebels caused much destruction, including the immobilising of Sudan's Air Force on the ground, but their plans went wrong. After a day-long shootout between the rebels and the Army, which remained loyal to Numeiry, the president emerged in full control. In the fighting 700 rebels and 82 soldiers were killed.

Retribution was quick and severe; 98 were executed for their part in the plot, and several hundred were imprisoned. The July coup attempt brought Sudan closer to its two most powerful neighbours. A mutual defence pact was signed with Egypt (a) immediately after the attempt, and this was followed by tripartite talks with Egypt and Saudi Arabia that appeared aimed at isolating Libya politically and economically. Sudan's links , political and economie, with Saudi Arabia were consolidated during the October visit of King Khaled to Khartoum.

Despite continued dominance of the political scene by the President and the Sudanese Socialist Union (SSU), the only legal political party, the last few years have witnessed moves designed to cement political stability. In June 1977 Sadiq el Mahdi (one of the two leaders of the «National Front», an organisation of opposition parties) was invited to return from exile and subsequently many political prisoners were released from detention. In National Assembly elections held in February 1977, the opposition was allowed to put forward candidates, albeit under the umbrella of the SSU. Between 120 and 140 seats of the 304 member Assembly are thought to have been won by «non-SSU» candidates, thereby creating a more representative administration. Finally, on 12 April 1978, those opposition leaders remaining in exile signed a declaration of reconciliation with the gouvernment whereby the National Front would be dissolved and former members remaining in exile would be permitted to return in safety.

The chief remaining threat to stability appears to be in the South. Following the granting of a degree of autonomy, which, however, excluded control of defence, external affairs and economic planning, in 1972 after 17 years of civil strife, a fragile peace exists. Dissatisfaction concerning continuing economic and social discrepancies between the North and the poorer South remains and the election of a new Southern President in March, 1978 whose attitude to Sudanese unity remains unclear, has introduced fresh uncertainty into the relationships between this area and the Central Government.

Industrial unrest (1981)

Industrial unrest in Sudan in 1981 included a national strike by the country's 43,000 railway and river transport workers in early June in support of a pay claim. After the SSU secretariat had on June 14 condemned the strike as politically motivated and as a «conspiracy directed from abroad», Maj.-Gen. Umar Mohammed al Tayib, the Minister of National Security accused Libya of setting up an underground army in Sudan with the intention of overthrowing the Government, while at the same time the Egyptian Government accused Col. Kadhafi of preparing to invade Sudan with the backing of the Soviet Union.

On June 16, President Numery ordered the security forces to arrest the «saboteurs» responsible for the strike and decreed new measures to ban work stoppages and to bring alltrade unions under the closer «supervision» of the SSU (Sudan Socialist Union).

Since 1971 Sudan has moved from close friendship with the USSR towards firmer ties with the West and the Arab world. This new direction in external relations has been matched by a change in internal economic policy. Nationalisation of private and foreign-owned businesses was reserved in 1973 with many confiscated businesses being returned to private ownership . In addition, legislation encouraging foreign direct investment was passed in 1972 and favourably revised in 1974.

(Transitional-January 1956)

Fundamental Rights

All persons in the Sudan are free and equal before the law. No disability shall attach to any Sudanese by reason of birth, religion, race of sex in regard to public or private employment or in the admission to or in the exercise of any occupation, trade, business or profession.

All persons shall enjoy freedom of conscience, and the right freely to profess their religion, subject only to such conditions relating to morality, public order, or health and may be imposed by law. All persons shall have the right of free expression of opinion, and the right of free association and combination subject to the law. No person may be arrested, detained, imprisoned or deprived of the use of ownership of his property except by due process of law.

Supreme Commission

Parliament shall elect five persons who shall together constitute the Supreme Commission. The S.C. shall be the highest contitutional authority in the Sudan and in it shall vest the supreme command of the armed forces. Except as otherwise expressed in the Constitution, the Supreme Commission in the discharge of its functions shall act on the advice of the Council of Ministers.

The Executive

The Supreme Commission shall appoint as Prime Minister such person as may from time to time be elected for the purpose by the House of Representatives from amongst the existing members of Parliament. The Prime Minister shall be appointed Minister to one or more of the several Departments of Government, or Minister without portfolio.

A person who is party to an existing contract with the Government shall not be eligible for appointment unless he shall have disclosed to the Prime Minister the existence and nature of such contract and of his interest therein, and either the Prime Miniter shall have raised no objection thereto, or he shall at the request of the Prime Minister have terminated his interest therein.

The Prime Minister and other Ministers shall together constitute a council of Ministers, which shall be responsible to Parliament for the executive and administrative functions of government.

The Ministers shall be collectively responsible for the policy decisions and acts of the Council. Provided that where in the opinion of the Prime Minister any such matter does not involve an issue of confidence in the Council as a whole, it shall lie within the discretion of the Prime Minister whether an adverse vote thereon in the House of Representatives shall entail the resignation or or termination of appointment of the Minister responsible, or the withdrawal or revocation of the matter in question.

The Legislature

There shall be constituted a Parliament for the Sudan which shall consist of two Houses, namely a Senate and a House of Representatives.

The Supreme Commission, the Senate and the House of Representatives shall together constitute the Legislature for the Sudan. The Senate shall be composed of 50 members of whom 20 shall be nominated by the Supreme Council at their discretion, and 30 shall be elected. The House of Representatives shall be composed of elected members only.

Every Senate shall continue for a period of three years from the beginning of its first session. Unless sooner dissolved, every House of Representatives shall continue for a period of three years from the beginning of its first session.

No treaty, agreement or convention with any other country of countries or any other country of countries or any decision made in any international convention, association or other body, shall have effect in the Sudan unless ratified and affirmed by Parliament by law.

There shall be an Auditor-General for the Sudan, who shall be a servant of and directly responsible to Parliament.

JUSTICE

Civil justice is administrated through the High Court of Justice in Khartoum, province courts, and district judges. There is a body of civil law; where there is no special enactment, cases are decided according to " justice, equity, and good conscience". The criminal code is based upon the Indian Penal Code and is dispensed in major, minor, and magistrate's courts. There are also people's courts that try a sustantial proportion of civil and criminal cases in accordance with popular cusom. Muslims are subject to the Shari'ah, the religious law of Islam in questions of inheritance, marriage, divorce, family relationship, and charitable trusts.

THE ECONOMY

Sudan, the largest country in Africa covering over 2 1/2 million square kilomètres, remains largely undeveloped and the majority of the population lives at subsistence level. Agriculture is the mainstay of the economy generating 40% of Gross Domestic Product (GDP), almost all (95%) exports and half of government revenues. Although the private sector is expanding, the public sector nevertheless continues to account for around half of employment and investment and nearly 80% of export earnings.

Whilst investment, particularly in the public sector, has picked up in recent years, economic development is constrained by a number of factors including inadequate transport, communications and services, and shortages of both unskilled and skilled labour. In fact, skilled workers are now emigrating to more lucrative positions in the oil-rich Gulf states. In addition, a shortage of foreign exchange and the consequent need to curtail imports has meant that capital equipment and spare parts have been in short supply.

A major factor in the present economic malaise is difficulty in fiscal policy. In the absence of external funds, for example, Arab finance has not been as forthcoming as expected, the government has been forced to borrow from the domestic banking system to finance large budget deficits.

The 1978-83 six-year development plan

Published in July 1977, the plan is the initial stage of a long term programme extending, in three phases, to 1995. Total investment of £S 2.67 billion is envisaged for the first period, with over half being financed from external sources. Sudanese planners appear confident that ample foreign finance will be forthcoming from overseas commercial banks, international aid, the West and the rich Arab states. However, with only around US$278 million having been attracted from these sources in 1977, Sudan may find it difficult to reach the targets set.

The plan aims at a growth rate of 7 1/2% per annum which, when compared with the average annual rate of 4 1/2% achieved in the five years to June 1975 and a World Bank projection of 5 1/2% a year for the plan period, appears highly ambitious. Per capita income is also planned to rise almost three fold to around US$ 900 by 1995.

The main features include concentration on agriculture, which has been allocated 27% of total planned expenditure, as the key to future expansion; development of industry (20%), particularly agro industries and food processing; improvement of transport and communications (19%); further encouragement of both the domestic and foreign private sectors; and central development planning. Unemployment, income disparities and the widespread provision of basic services are all to receive increased attention.

Industrial & Mineral development

Industry, which a decade ago was virtually non-existent, now accounts for some 10% of GDP and provides employment for around 2% of the population. In the main, industrial establishments are either small-or medium-scale utilising indigenous agricultural products and producing for the domestic market. Activities include textiles and footwear manufacture, food processing, sugar refining and the production of cement.

Mining, although presently small-scale, is expanding rapidly with the aid of foreign capital. Various programmes are underway for the exploration and exploitation of minerals thought to be available in commercially-viable quantities, including copper, gypsum, gold, magnesite, asbestos, iron, mica, chromite, marble, limestone, kaolin, talc and manganese. Although deposits of oil and natural gas were discovered in early 1981 in the south of the country by the (US) Chevron oil company, production of crudes is gaining momentum and already a new pipeline and refinery company are being established with the assistance of the International Finance Corporation (IFC) which announced on Aug. 20 that it would take a 20 percent stake in the project.

The project involves (i) the construction of a 340-mile oil pipeline from Chevron's Unity field (located just inside the Southern Region) to Kosti, a rail, road and river transport centre on the White Nile 150 miles south of Khartoum; and (ii) the construction at Kosti of an oil refinery with a capacity of 15,000-25,000 barrels per day.

Responsibility for the project will be vested in the White Nile Petroleum Company, a new enterprise jointly owned by the Sudanese Government (40 %), Chevron (40 %) and IFC (20 %).

Agriculture

Successful exploitation of the immense agricultural potential is regarded as the key to economic development. The Sudan has over 200 million acres suitable for agriculture although only around 15 million are currently cultivated, mostly on a subsistence basis. The Arab oil states, who wish to reduce their dependence on western industrial countries for food, see the country as a future "breadbasket of the Arab World". Towards this end, a 25-year programme, which in the coming years will form part of overall development planing, has been drawn up by the Arab Fund for Economic and Social Development, based in Kuwait. A total of 100 agricultural and infrastructural projects are to be undertaken in the first ten years at a cost of some US $ 6 1/2 billion. It is hoped that the Sudan will be able to supply around 40 % for Arab food needs by 1985, rising to 80 % by the end of the century. However, the Arab Authority for Development and Agricultural Investment set up to carry out the programme is committed to providing only a proportion of the required finance, with the bulk to be obtained from foreign aid donors, private investors and the Sudanese government. Moreover, to date no funds have been committed by the Authority.

Of the considerable number of projects to develop both arable and pastoral farming, the Gezira irrigated farming project is perhaps the most successful, producing 75 % of total cotton output. Other important projects include the Rahad irrigation scheme, the first phase of which was opened December 1977, the Kenana Sugar Estate, which, however, has faced rapidly rising costs and falling international sugar prices, and the Jonglei canal project in the South, which aims at providing irrigation and a navigable waterway and parallel road.

Although the stage is set for a swing from cotton to other agricultural products as major exports by the end of next decade, cotton (which represented almost 60 % of export earnings in the first three-quarters of 1978), will nevertheless remain of considerable economic importance. In recent years, world demand has switched from favouring the long staple variety (once the bulk of Sudanese output) to the medium staple. In response, Sudanese cotton growers have increased the area set aside for this variety.

GEOGRAPHY

Syria is bounded by the Mediterranean and the Lebanese Republic on the West, by Israel and Jordan on the south, by Iraq on the east and by Turkey on the north. The frontier between Syria and Turkey (Nisibin — Jeziret ibn Omar) was settled by the Franco — Turkish aggreement of June 1929.

Ther is plenty of land available in Syria but water severely limits its utilisation. Fortunately, rainfall is supplemented by the water brought down from the mountains by its rivers. The principal of these is the Euphrates which has its headwaters in Turkey and flows in a generally southearsterly direction across Syria into Iraq. Together with its most important tributary, the Khabour, which also rises in Turkey, it accounts for about 90% of the total annual flow of all Syrian rivers. In the west, the largest river is the Orontes which is fed by springs from the Lebanon and Anti—Lebanon ranges and flows northwards through the marshy area known as the Ghab into Turkey. Farther south the Barada river, rising in the Anti—Lebanon, supplies lifegiving water to the fertile Ghouta oasis around Damascus. In the extreme south the Yarmuk river flows along the Jordan river.

Syrian Desert

South and southeast of the Euphrates and extending towards Hama, Homs and Damascus lies a large, roughly triangular area, the Syrian desert. This desert or steppe area. though dotted here and there by an oasis, is too arid to support cultivation. Vegetation springs up briefly following the scant winter rains and supports during this time flocks of sheep and goats tended by Bedouin tribesmen who are also engaged in the breeding of camels. Inadequate water supplies and occasionally severe weather make serious inroads on the flocks from time to time.

Administrative Districts

Administratively, Syria is divided into 12 (twelve) mohafazats or districts.

Of greater significance, however are the principal economic regions. Farthest south are the adjoining regions of Hauran and Djebel Druze. The Hauran Plain, an area of rather high fertility, has long been known as a granary, even in Roman times. Its principal crop is wheat, but barley, maize, sorghum and pulses are also important. To the east rises the Djebel Druze and basaltic dome, where the Druzes, a proud and independent people eke a subsistence living from the pockets of fertile soil in their mountains. Here the pressure of population on the land is acute. Agricultural holdings in the Hauran and Djebel Druze are predominantly small.

To the northwest of the Hauran lies the higher, rolling Julani Plateau stretching towards the Hermon range. This stony region is suitable only for grazing and, to some extent, for orchards. To the north a narrow bank of cultivation leads to Damascus where semidesert conditions prevail and rainfall is generally inadequate for farming. Thanks to the water of the Barada river however, Damascus lies in a fertile oasis, known as the Ghouta. It is pre-eminently an area of orchards and viveyards yielding olives, fruit and nuts.

Northeast of Damascus up to the plains of Homs the country is for the most part rugged and barren, with occasional oases. From Homs to Aleppo stretches an extensive plain, which is the most important agricultural area in Syria, along with the Djezireh.

Aleppo, the principal grain market and commercial centre of the country, has also developed a considerable and textiles, vegetable oil extraction and soap making, and cement.

Climate

The climate varies from region to region. The eastern and southern zones are almost rainless, the north has a deposit normally sufficient to support light vegetation and crops, the west enjoys up to 40 inches of rain in the mountains, with less but adequate amounts in the plains, valleys and coast. The highest peaks are snowcovered for most of the year. Temperatures and humidity vary, as would be expected, as between the coast, the mountain zone and the plains. In the latter, summer and winter temperatures are both extreme, but humidity is slight.

Population

Population growth has been steady over the last twenty- six years, almost doubling in number from a total of 2,649,058 in 1940 to 6,471,074 in 1969, 7,410,000 in 1975, before reaching 8,980,000 in 1980.

Syria has been known through history to be the Mecca of Immigrants. Foreign elements who have settled in the country since the Arab Conquest in A.D. 636 are as numerous as they are variegated: Turks (VIIIth century), Circassians (XIIIth century), Tsherkess (1878), Albanians (1910), Armenians (1922), Kurds (XXIth century), and Palestinians (1948 & 1967).

Religion

The religious groups within the population are the Sunni Muslims (6,000,000), Ismailis and other Shi'its (550,000) and Druzes (250,000).

Syria contains about 1,550,000 Christians.

HISTORY

Syria from the earliest times was successively invaded by the Canaanites, the Phoenicians B.C. (third millenium) — In the second millenium by the Aramaens and the Nomad Tribes, entering from the Arabian Peninsula; before the first century B.C. Syria was again invaded by the Egyptians, the Hittites, the Persian and the Macedonian Greeks. Then the Roman occupation in the first Century B.C.

Moslems invaders by their decisive victory in 636 on the Yarmuk, ruled all of Syria in the time of the Umayyad dynasty till the year 730. Then with the accession of the Abbasid dynasty in Iraq, Baghdad became the centre of the Empire instead of Damascus. In 1098, the first Crusaders conquered Antioch but not the other towns and in 1174, Salah Eddine had control over Damascus and conquered Allepo in 1183. Salah Eddin destroyed the Kingdom of Jerusalemn which was established by the Crusaders by his victory over them in 1187 at Hittin. The Crusaders regained control over the coasts of Syria after Salah Eddine's death. Only, later were they eliminated by the Mamluks military campaigns. The Mamlucks reigned over Syria until 1517. From 1517 to 1614, then for a period of four centuries the Ottaman Turks ruled over Syria.

After the First World War, Syria was brought under the influence of the French by a secret agreement negociated between England, France and Russia (1916). In 1920 Syrian Nationalists called their country «The Independent State of Great Syria», but again in July 1920 French troops occupied Damascus as a San Remo Conference had given France a mandate for the whole of Syria.

Independence Achieved

Following the capitulation of France soon after the beginning of World War II, the British and Free French stated to the Syrians and Lebanese «From henceforth you will be sovereign and independent peoples and you will be able either to form yourselves into separate states or to unite into a single state».

Independent Syria suffered teething trouble. In March 1949, the civilian government headed by Shukri al-Kuwaitli came to an end when Col. Husni az-Zain assumed power in a bloodless coup. Zain was himself overthrown in August by Col. Sami al-Hinnawi. A third coup, led by Col. Fawzi Salu in conjunction with Col. Adib ash-Shishakli, followed in December; by November 1951 Shishakli had removed his associate by a fourth coup. Shishakli was overthrown in February 1954.

Union with Egypt

The years that followed the overthrow of Shishakli in Syria saw the rise of Pres. Gamal Abdel Nasser of Egypt to uncontested leadership of the pan-Arab unity movement. The continued interference of pro-western Iraq in Syrian affairs forced Syria to give up its sovereignty in Feb. 1958 to become, for the next three and one-half years, the «Northen Province» of the United Arab Republic (UAR) of which Nasser was President. The Union of Syria with Egypt proved a bitter disappointment. In September 1961 a coup led by rightist Syrian army officers, re-established Syria as a sovereign and independent state.

The Ba'thists in Syria were soon faced with a Syrian problem. Although their party was led by Syrians, it was pan-Arab in ideology and organisation and had branches in Iraq, Lebanon and Jordan. Non-Syrian Ba'thists were members of the central committee of the party, which had its headquarters in Damascus; the continued subordination of the Syrian branch of the party to the central committee gave nonSyrian Ba'thists considerable leverage in Syrian affairs. In May 1965 the party split. A ninth coup in February 1966 set up a new military regime in the name of the Syrian Ba'th which, with its Alawite leadership has since then maintained itself in power, first under strongman Co. Salah al-Jadid until November 1970 when he was deposed in favour of Hafez al-Assad who on March 14, 1971, was sworn in as President.

For Syria, 1971 was marked by some relaxation in the internal political atmosphere and an improvement in relations with most other Arab States. Diplomatic relations with Morocco and Tunisia were restored and relations with Saudi Arabia improved after permission had been given for the repair of the Tapline oil pipeline, closed since May 1970. The most important rapprochement was with Lebanon when President Sulaiman Frangieh came to Damascus on March 16. It was first official visit of a Lebanese Head of State since either country's independence.

On May 27, 1973, Britain resumed full diplomatic relations with Syria which were broken off in 1967 after the Six-Day War.

Vote of Confidence

Syria gave its leader, President al-Assad, a big vote of confidence and concentrated even more power in his hands in a referendum on March 12, 1973 when 97.6 per cent of the voters approved a Constitution devised by him.

Under the new Constitution, the President will not only be Head of the State but commander-in-chief of the armed forces, secretary-general of the ruling Baath Socialist Party and President of the National Progressive Front which links minority groups with the Baathists.

The Arab- Israel War

There had been tension of the armistice line between Israel and Syria since the beginning of 1967. In the first two weeks of January almost daily incidents took place, sometimes involving the use of tanks and artillery. In April, Syria lost six MIG fighters in an air clash during which Israeli aircraft flew over Damascus.

When war came (June 5-10) and after defeating Jordan, Israel turned against Syria and occupied the Golan Heights and the key town of Quneitra. The Syrians agreed to the cease-fire one day after Egypt.

According to the Syrian Ministry of Information, Syrian casualties in the fighting were 20 officiers and 125 NCOs and men killed, and 99 officers and 1500 men wounded. The figure for those who had evacuated their homes in Israeli occupied areas in Syria was stated to be 45,000.

The Fourth Arab-Israeli War

(Oct. 6-1973)

The Syrian Front -While the Egyptian armed forces were crossing the Suez Canal, the Syrian Army launched an offensive with some 1,400 tanks- virtually its entire armoured force- aimed at the recapture of the Golan Heights, which had been lost in the 1967 war. During the first three of four days the Syrians-who in the initial stages greatly outnumbered the Israelis on this front succeeded in driving more than 15 miles into Israli-occupied territory, recapturing the «ghost town» of Quneitra which had been lost to the Israelis in 1967 and had been deserted by its inhabitants, and advancing across the Golan Heights to within a few miles of Israel proper.

During this period of the battle, while the Israelis were fighting primarily a defensive action on the northern front, big air battles were fought over the Golan Heights, and the Israel Air Force on Oct. 9 bombed targets in Damascus in retaliation for Syrian rocket attacks, which caused damage to Israeli kibutzim (agricultural settlements) and farms in Upper Galilee, and an undisclosed number of civilian casualties. In the attack on Damascus, carried out by Phantom jets, Israeli planes scored direct hits on the Syrian ministryof Defence and the headquarters of the Syrian radio, which was temporarily put out of action; the Syrian authorities said that there had been a number of civilian casualties, particularly in a part of the capital where there were many foreign embassies.

By Oct. 12 the Syrian Army had been driven behind the 1967 ceasefire line in all areas and Israeli troops and armor had penetrated some six miles into Syria proper, encountering strong resistance.

In the remaining days of the war, however, the two sides remained largely deadlocked, the Syrians fighting tenaciously to bar the road to Damascus. When the cease-fire had come into operation on Oct. 24 the Israelis had reoccupied the whole of the Golan Heights, driven deeply into Syria, advanced to within 20 miles of Damascus, and were in occupation of some 300 square miles of Syria proper.

Reaction to Egyptian Peace Initiative in 1977

To offset the Egyptian initiative of a peace treaty with Israel, a rapprochement was reached with Iraq in October 1978. This aims at setting up a «federal» or «confederal» Union between the two countries with a unified military command. As a result, the transit of Iraqi oil via the Kirkuk-Banias pipeline, interrupted since April 1976, started again at the end of February. In addition, the rapprochment policy with Saudi Arabia is continuing. This had helped to raise defence costs, which absorbed $ 1.1. billion in 1978,25% of the total budget. Arab aid has enabled the allocations for 1979 to be nearly doubled to 37% of the budget while military assistance is provided by Libya and the USSR.

Syria- Soviet Union
Treaty of friendship and co-operation

President Assad of Syria paid a two day official visit to the Soviet Union on Oct. 8-10, 1980, and shorthly after his arrival in Moscow on Oct. 8 signed a 20-year treaty of friendship and co-operation with the Soviet leader, late President Brezhnev.

Syria had on a number of occasions in 1980 stated that it intended to 'qualitatively improved' relations with the Soviet Union with a view to restoring the military and strategic balance between Syria and Israel which, Syrian leaders felt, had been disrupted by peace negociations conducted by Egypt and Israel with US mediation since the visit by President Sadat of Egypt to Jerusalem in November 1977.

Syria's relations with Iraq had deteriorated steadily in 1980, efforts undertaken in 1978 and 1979 to merge the two countries having been abandoned by mid-1979. In August, 1980, Syria had expelled the Iraqi embassy staff from Damascus in retaliation for the expulsion of its own diplomats from Baghdad while the tension between the two countries had been exacerbated by the outbreak of the war between Iran and Iraq in September. The Gulf war had also led to a worsening of relations between Syrian and Jordan (the latter backing Iraq), and this tension was underlined in late November by the deployment by both countries of troops and tanks towards their mutual border.

Friendly relations between Syria and Libya had, however, been consolidated by a joint declaration on Sept. 10 which provided for the merger of the two countries while later that month it was reported that Libya had transferred over $ 1,000 million to the Soviet Union to pay for the arms supplies recently purchased by Syria and had at the same time provided $ 600,000,000 to help boost the Syrian economy. However, during a visit by President Assad to Libya on Dec. 15-17 for talks with the Libyan leader, Col. Moamer at Kadhafi, on the merger of the two countries it appeared that certain disagreements had arisen between the two countries over the methods of achieving unity. Libya and Syria had in fact abandoned all plans to merge as they had failed to agree on the system of government to be implemented.

Internal Security Developments

During 1981, the Government continued to experience active oppositon predominantly from the Moslem Brotherhood. A huge car bomb explosion in Damascus was attributed to the Brotherhood and this was followed by further indications of unrest, culminating in February 1982 in an uprising in Hama, which lasted for nearly three weeks. This was eventually put down by the Government forces. In February 82 an opposition alliance entitled the National Alliance of the Syrian people was formed, consisting of 19 Factions.

The judicial System is composed of the highest court " High Constitutional Court", est. 1974, in Damascus; Court of Cassation, Damascus; 13 courts of Appeal; 110 Summary Courts; 41 First Instance Courts; Courts for Minors; Military Court, Damascus; Personal Status Courts: for muslims " Qadi Shari'i"; for Druzes " Qadi Mazhabi"

Having a greater diversity of resources than many Middle Eastern countries — oil, gas, phosphates, a good river system and large agricultural area, a position on the east-west trade route, a strong commercial tradition and a relatively well-educated population — the Syrian economy has considerable potential.

During the 1970s there was an average rate of growth of 8% per annum in GDP in real terms largely because of high investment which in some years amounted to around one quarter of GDP.

However, political instability in the region and attempts to reach ambitious development targets set for the fourth development plan (1976-80) have resulted in economic difficulties. Despite the latter, GDP grew by 90% in real terms in 1980, twice the rate of 1979.

Agriculture

Farming employs about half the labour force and contributes about a fifth to GDP. About 45% of the land is arable, of which about three-quarters is cultivated, other land is used for nomadic animal husbandry, while the remainder is desert and mountain.

Extensive irrigation programmes, notably in the Euphrates basin have begun to ease the problem of periodic droughts and consequent fluctuations in agricultural production.

Cotton was traditionaly the main export earner but has taken second place to oil since 1974 despite a rising volume of cotton exports between 1975 and 1978. Development of improved strains of cotton seed has recently allowed a reduction in the area planted and some land to be diverted to growing wheat and sugar beet but an increase of 44% in the price farmers have received in 1981/82 is likely to reserve this trend, and may increase the amount of cotton available for export.

Grain crops, notably of wheat and barley, are of considerable importance, occupying about two-thirds of arable land. However, production has failed to keep pace with domestic requirements and instead of being a wheat-exporter, as was the case a decade ago, shipments have had to be imported under the US Food Aid Programme. Fruit and vegetables are of significance but imports exceed exports. There are plans to develop the livestock industry; research and development is being undertaken with assistance from the World Bank and the Food and Agriculture Organisation of the United Nations, while Hungarian aid has helped to expand the poultry industry.

The government has done a great deal to promote agriculture in recent years. In addition to extensive irrigation and land drainage schemes, which are adding both to the cultivable land area and promoting productivity, the development of the road and rail net works and improvement of rural life have been designed to open up the rural area and stem the flow of population to the towns.

Industry

Most of the manufacturing industry in the public sector, though a significant section remains in private hands and has government approval. State industry is divided into six main groupings covering food, engineering, sugar, textiles, chemicals and building materials; the private sector is active in textiles, food products, leather, paper, chemicals, machinery and electrical goods, as well as in traditional crafts.

Recent performance has been mixed; cotton yarn out put was disappointing in the later 1970s though it is expected to pick up when the current expansion of industry is complete.

The oilseed industry is also being expanded and improved with a new mill designed to process 300 tons of cottonseed a day financed by the World Bank.

Cement production has grown fast but it has not achieved the 45% target stipulated in the plan because construction of the two larger of five new plants has been delayed.

There has also been delay in expanding fertiliser production because of a shortage of suitable manpower; production is based partly on the country's phosphate reserves and partly on feedstock from the Homs oil refinery.

The iron and steel industry has expanded in recent years with the addition of a new smelter and a steel pipe plant, and the possibility of using iron ore deposits on the Lebanese border is being investigated.

Mining of phosphates started in 1972 with production reaching 1.3 million tons in 1979. Further expansion by the state-owned company is expected to bring output up to 3.3 million tons by 1985 while development of port facilities at Tartous should facilitate exports.

It is believed that substantial deposits of uranium are associated with the phosphate deposits and there are tentative plans for a nuclear power station if these resources can be exploited.

Output of electricity was doubled between 1977 and 1980 and is expected to double again by 1990. Generating capacity has been substantially increased by eight turbines linked with the Euphrates dam which was completed in 1978; the following year these turbines produced over two-thirds of electricity generated in the country.

Oil and gas

Oil production began in 1968 and reached a peak of around 10 million tons a year from 1976 to 1978. In 1979 and 1980 output has fallen to 8.5-9 million tons mainly because of a drop in oilfield pressure. Despite considerable prospecting activity since Western oil companies were permitted to return to Syria in 1975 after more than a decade, no substantial new oil finds have been made to augment the 300 million tons of recoverable reserves in existing fields; however, proven gas reserves have total 700,000 million cubic feet.

Most of the oil produced is heavy and of low quality and it is necessary to import lighter oils to blend with it in local refineries. Capacity was augmented by 6 million tons a year with the opening in February 1981 of the US 300 million Banias refinery which enables Syria to meet all its gas and diesel oil requirements and also all the other by-products needs.

Most of the light oil for blending is imported from Iraq by pipeline; supplies were cut for a period during the Gulf War but have been resumed. Of the 250,000 barrels a day passing through the pipeline, Syria takes about 40% for bleding, and exports the remainder earning 35 cents a barrel under a transit agreement reached in 1979.

GEOGRAPHY

Geographically, Tunisia occupies a key position between the eastern and western basins of the Mediterranean: The Sicilian Channel between Cape Bon (Tunisia) and Sicily is only 80 miles wide and is therefore one of the busiest stretches of water in the world.

While it is only some 63,000 square miles in area, Tunisia has a long seabord, streching for 745 miles. This is the main feature distinguishing Tunisia from its neighbour Algeria, where the Tell Atlas barrier stops the valuable influence of the sea, too close to the coast, and from Morocco, which is partly in the Sahara though it looks towards the Atlantic. The whole of Tunisia lies open to the Mediterranean.

Traditionally, Tunisia is divided into four main natural regions:

The North, crossed from west to east by the continuations of the Atlas Mountains (Kroumirian Mountains), is the area with the highest rainfall: 23 to 31 inches annually. Essentially it is an agricultural region and the Medjerda Valley, situated in it, is one of the richest plains in the country.

The Sahel is a coastal zone stretching from Cape Bon to south of Sfax. Conditions there are ideal for growing olive trees which, with the local fisheries and intensive handicraft production, constitute the main source of wealth of the region, after tourism.

The Centre is a zone of steppe country separated from the North by a range of hills (Djebel Shambi 5,065 feet), where the influence of the sea can no longer be felt. Irrigation possibilities are relatively limited and the rainfall is less than 16 inches. The region is well-suited for stock-breeding.

The South is a pre-desert zone with rainfall of less then 8 inches. Its principal resources are in the oases, where certain crops (vegetables and dates mostly) can be grown and livestock raised.

Climate

In the north, including the city of Tunis, the climate is Mediterranean. From May to mid-October temperatures average 30 degrees centigrade to 37 degrees centigrade; there is little rainfall except during the second half of September and in October.

In April and early May and from mid-October to mid-November, the weather is warm but unreliable. Rain is fairly frequent during the winter months from December to the end of March. The average temperature during the day is 13 degrees centigrade, but the evenings and nights are rather cool.

Principal cities and towns

Tunis, population 850,000, is the centre of Government and business, and, together with La Goulette, is the chief port.

Sfax, population 350,000, is the chief town of southern Tunisia, the second port and the centre for export of phosphates and olive oil.

Souss, population 150,000, and Bizerte, population 78,000, are ports and industrial and administrative centres. There is also a special petroleum port at La Skhira.

Kairouan, population 50,000, is an administrative centre and Islamic holy place.

Nearly all important business is handled through Tunis. With the exception of Sfax, none of the other towns is of any commercial importance.

The number of Europeans living in the country has decreased rapidly over the past few years and at present it is estimated that there are about 40,000 (mainly French and Italian). Most of them live in Tunis.

Underemployment and unemployment are high.

Language

Arabic, is the official language but for all commercial and technical needs French is equally or more useful. English is only very rarely understood.

Principal Religions

The majority of the people are Moslem, mostly Sunnis. The largest Christian community is Roman Catholic. There are also Protestant, Greek Orthodox and Jewish minorities.

Public holidays (1980)

New Year's Day (1 January); Revolution Day (18 January); Mulid al Nabi - birthday of the Prophet (30 January); Independence Day (20 March); Martyrs' Day (9 April); Labour Day (1 May); Victory Day (1 June); Republic Day (25 July); President Bourguiba's birthday (3 August); Women's Day (13 August); Eid al Fitr - end Ramadan (2 days) (13 August); Memorial Day - commemoration of the foundation of the Party in 1934 (3 September); Evacuation of Bizerta (15 October); Eid Al Adha (2 days) (29 October); Muslem New Year (AH 1401) (9 November).

HISTORY

Record of Events

Carthage - Carthage founded in Tunisia the first empire recorded in history.

Rome - A prolonged duel between the two powers culminated in the destruction of Carthage and the foundation of Roman Africa.

436 - Domination of the Vandals.

534 - Tunisia becomes part of the Byzantine Empire.

8th to 9th Century - Arab invasion. Islam gradually replaces Byzantine domination.

800-909 - Fatimid Dynasty, followed by the Zirides.

End of the 10th Century - The Hillalian invasion brings the whole country under complete Arab domination.

13th Century - A governor declares Tunisia independent of Caliph Almohade, and founds the Hafside Dynasty.

1535-1574 - Spanish protectorate following the capture of Tunis by Emperor Charles V.

1574-1881 - Tunisia becomes a Turkish province.

1705 - Hussein Ben Ali seizes power and becomes the founder of the Husseinite Dynasty.

1869 - An international Commission examines the financial position of Tunisia and induces France to intervene in the country's internal affairs.

1881 - The Bey concludes the Le Bardo Treaty with France, under which France assumes responsibility for Tunisia's defence and external relations.

1883 - La Marsa Convention entitles to initiate internal reforms. In the ensuing years a large number of French settlers lands in Tunisia.

1920 - Internal events in the Protectorate lead to the formation of a Tunisian nationalist movement.

1934 - Creation of the Neo-Destour Party.

3 June 1955 - Following negotiations between Paris and Tunis, Tunisia achieves statehood.

20 March 1956 - A protocol agreement between France and Tunisia formally regognizes the independence of Tunisia.

12 April 1956 - Formation of the Bourguiba Ministry.

25 July 1957 - Proclamation of the Tunisian Republic.

1 June 1959 - Promulgation of the Constitution.

Tunisia's relations with France have often fluctuated sharply after independence and the withdrawal of French troops from the naval base of Bizerta in 1963. French technical and financial aid which had been suspended because of Tunisian support for the Algerians was resumed following the Bizerta settlement.

With the Arab World

Relations with its neighbours and other Muslims states have been similarly disturbed, particularly with Egypt over alleged interference in Tunisia's internal affairs; but Nasser and Bourguiba effected a reconcilation at the first OAU meeting in 1963. Tunisian-Moroccan relations declined because of Morocco's support for Mauritania's independence. Although Tunisia had been outstandingly staunch in support for Algeria's independence struggle, relations deteriorated rapidly soon after independence because of an assassination attempt on Bourguiba in 1963 which was laid at the door of Algeria.

Relations with other Arab States remained poor, particularly as a result of Bourguiba's unorthodox stand in the Arab-Israeli dispute.

Tunisia's relations with Libya were characteristically erratic over the last decade. President Kadhafi's proposal of a merger between the two countries which had been at first accepted in January 1974 at Djerba was finally rejected in 1978 because of "the diverse economic and social structures of the two countries" as editorialised by the DSP daily "Al Amal". By contrast, the two countries exchanged instruments of ratification of an agreement on the continental shelf (Feb. 27,1978) which had originally been referred to the International Court of Justice at The Hague.

On the home front President Bourguiba had to contend with dissident students and workers. In a lengthy speech over Tunis radio, on 19 March 1979, President Bourguiba warned against the dangers inherent in strikes, echoing a growing awareness that the trade unions were being used to voice political dissidence which could not find other outlets.

During the general strike called by the UGTT (Union Générale des Travailleurs Tunisiens) when violent clashes erupted between the security forces and strikers, the opposition claimed that the death toll was as high as 140.

Foreign policy

Although Tunisia's foreign policy is essentially non-aligned, the government has consistently shown a marked preference for association with the Western Powers.

Attack on Gafsa

Relations between Tunisia and Libya suffered a major deterioration in late January 1980 following an armed attack on the Tunisian town of Gafsa by a group of Tunisian insurgents who, according to the Tunisian authorities, had been trained in Libya. Moreover, the subsequent deployment of French military support for the Tunisian Government engendered serious strains in relations between Libya and France, the former accusing the latter of seeking to recolonize its former Tunisian protectorate.

According to the official Tunisian version of the events at Gafsa (an oasis town at the centre of the country's phosphate mining area), early on Jan. 27, 1980 a party of some 50 armed men, all Tunisians, seized the army and police barracks and other buildings in the town and took a number of hostages; they were then engaged in heavy fighting by the Tunisian security forces, who succeeded in regaining control of the town in the evening of Jan. 27. Casualties resulting from the fighting were given as 41 dead (22 security personnel, 15 civilians and four insurgents) and 111 injured (92 security personnel, 16 civilians and three insurgents) while 42 of the insurgents were said to have been arrested.

In response to a Tunisian request the French Government on Jan. 28 sent military transport aircraft and Puma helicopters to Tunisia accompanied by a group of French military advisers.

The French involvement was strongly condemned by the Government of Libya, where on Feb. 4 the French embassy in Tripoli was attacked by a large crowd of demonstrators and set on fire.

Liberalisation policy

The Tunisian Government's new policy of liberalisation and political «opening» manifested itself in the release over the period May—August 1980 not only of the remaining trade unionists still in prison as a result of the January 1978 disturbances but also of other political detainees. With the freeing of a group of detainees to mark President Bourguiba's 77th birthday on Aug. 3, a government spokesman claimed that there were no longer any political prisoners in Tunisia (although the authorities did not regard this category as including those sentenced in connexion with the January 1980 insurgent attack on Gafsa).

The November 1981 legislative elections were the first to be contested under a multi- party system since President Bourguiba assumed the presidency 25 years ago. The National Front, comprising Mr. Bourguiba's Parti Socialiste Destourien and the Union Générale des Travailleurs Tunisiens, was elected with an overwhelming majority, the three opposition parties receiving only 5% of the vote.

Foreign relations

Relations with France were improved when the French Prime Minister Raymond Barre, paid a working visit to Tunisia on Oct. 24—26 1980 during which agreement was reached (i) that the Tunisian Government would take steps to unblock about 85 per cent of the remaining bank accounts held in Tunisia by French nationals, and (ii) that France would participate in a new joint Tunisian—French—Arab investment bank (capital =250 million US dollars) which would provide funds to assist development projects in Tunisia.

During an official visit to Algeria on Sept. 7—9 1980, the Tunisian Prime Minister, Mr M'zali, reached agreement whith his Algerian counterpart, Col. Mohammed Ben Ahmed Abdelghani, on the establishment of close political, economic and cultural relations between the two countries and, in particular, on the immediate reactivation on the joint Algerian—Tunisian commission which had been established under the 1970 co-operation treaty.

The Tunisian Government's desire for a resumption of close co -operation whith Algeria was seen as a consequence of the continuing strained relations with Libya in the wake of the Libyan-backed insurgency at Gafsa in January 1980.

THE CONSTITUTION

Tunisia, a French protectorate after 1881, achieved independece in 1956 as a beylik or monarchy. It became a republic in 1957. The Neo-Destour Party, the only one represented in the National Assembly or Majlis al Ummah, drew up the republican constitution of 1959. This constitution, in part inspired by that of the United States, gives great power to the president. He must be a Muslim and is elected for five years with a maximum of three consecutive terms. He holds executive power, chooses the 12—member Cabinet, is supreme commander of the armed forces, makes civil and military appointments, and promulgates laws. He is, moreover, the guardian of the constitution, which embodies the customary guarantees of independence of the judiciary, equality before the law, and human freedoms. But a two - thirds majority of the National Assembly may revise the constitution, even against the president's will.

The president may remit any bill to the Assembly, and its passage then requires a two - thirds majority. The assembly consists of 90 deputies elected by direct universal suffrage for five years. It shares with the president the introduction of bills, and diplomatic treaties are submitted to it.

The Council of State is an administrative tribunal empowered to resolve legal disputes between individuals and state or public bodies; il also has an audit office that verified state accounts and submits reports.

Constitutional Amendments

Within the framework of constitutional reforms, which had been under discussion for several years, the National Assembly on Dec. 2, 1975, gave a first reading to a number of amendments, most of which would strengthen the powers of the President.

Under these amendments, the members of the National Assembly retained their right to move a vote of censure, but the President was empowered to respond to such a vote by dissolving the Assembly and holding new elections; if however, the newly -elected Assembly reintroduced and approved the same motion the President would have to retire from office.

The amendments also provided for recourse to a referendum in the event of any political decision on the future of the country's existence (e.g. on a merger with another country), and in the event of any change in the organization and functioning of the public powers, about which the National Assembly would not need to be advised in advance.

Under the amendments the motto of the Tunisian state was changed from "Freedom, Order, Justice" to "Order, Freedom, Justice".

POLITICAL PARTIES

Parti Socialiste Destourien (PSD) is the only legal party in Tunisia. Founded in 1934 by Habib Bourguiba, PSD (of moderate left-wing leanings) achieved Tunisian independence in 1955.

The following organisations operate as opposition parties

a) Front National Progressiste Tunisien follows socialist guidelines formulated by the late Egyptian President Gamal Abdel Nasser.

b) Social Democratic Party formed in 1978. In its communique published in June, the new party described its aims as the "safeguarding of the dignity of citizens", public liberty in general and the establishment of a socialist regime which rejected the "exploitation of man by man" and put "economic development at the service of social justice".

c) Movement of Popular Unity (MUP).

JUSTICE

The Government has abolished the multiple jurisdictions of religious (shari'i and rabbinic) tribunals. These have been integrated into the civil courts so as to form a single three-level jurisdiction, courts of appeal and High Courts.

A Personal Status Code was promulgated on August 17, 1956, and applied to Tunisians from 1 January 1957. This raised the status of women, made divorce subject to court decision, abolished polygamy and decreed a minimum marriage age.

THE ECONOMY

About three-quarters of the population is dependent on agriculture, and the prosperity of the country fluctuates markedly from year to year with the rainfall. However, in the late sixties industrial output, especially of petroleum products, chemicals, and fertilizers, was expanding rapidly, and the tourist business had grown spectacularly to assume an important place in the country's economy.

Agriculture

Agriculture, together fishing, contributes nearly 20% to GDP, supplies 9% of exports and employs 50% of the working population. The principal cash crops are cereals, olives, citrus fruit and vegetables. Under the Sixth Plan, (1982-86), the sector is allocated 17% of the investment budget, providing for annual growth of 4%-5%.

Output still depends to a large extent on climatic conditions. Cereals in particular have met only 50% of local demand over the last few years. The 1980-81 harvest was a marked improvement on previous years, however, with an outturn of 960,000 tons compared with 870,000 tons in 1979-80, but the 1982 cereal production is not expected to exceed the 1981 level of 1.2 million tons because of a lack of rainfall early in the season.

Tunisia supplies nearly 25% of world exports of olive oil, ranking second to Spain. The crop provides nearly half of agricultural export earnings. Production in 1980-81, at 120,000 tons, was substantially higher than the previous year's output of 85,000 tons but still well below the record 180,000 tons achieved in 1975-76. In 1982, only 90,000 tons is expected.

Output of citrus fruit in 1980-81 totalled 220,000 tons, a rise of 38% compared with the low level of 1979-80. The 1980 output of dates reached 47,000 tons while production of tomatoes, at 380,000 tons in 1981 compared with 330,000 tons in the previous year, continues to expand. Output of wine in 1980-81 amounted to 610,000 hectolitres (hl) compared with 580,000 hl the previous year, but remains well below the records achieved in 1973 and 1974.

In the fishing sector, with the launching of Tuniso-Spanish and Tuniso-French companies in 1982, production should reach 73,000 tons compared with 66,000 tons in 1981.

Mining and Energy

Mining and energy contributed 13.2% and 1.7% respectively to GDP in 1981 with exports of crude petroleum, phosphates and by-products accounting for nearly two-thirds of foreign currency earnings.

Tunisia is the world's fourth largest producer of phosphates. Production during the fifth Plan (1977-1981) IIX, although below forecasts, rose from 3.3 million tons in 1976 to 4.5 million tons in 1980. In 1981, output reached an estimated 5 million tons and is expected to rise to 5.5 million tons in 1982. With expansion based on the national mining company's considerable investment and modernisation, production is expected to increase rapidly during the decade to reach 9.5 million tons in 1990. The ratio of raw to processed phosphate is also expected to continue to fall over the period to a quarter compared with two-thirds currently. Other minerals include iron ore, production of which amounted to 400,000 tons in 1981, lead (11,000 tons) and zinc (23,000 tons). Output of non-ferrous metals is expected to decline again in 1982.

While oil production of 108,000 barrels per day (bpd) is not high in world terms, revenues contributed substantial export earnings of some 1.3 billion US dollars in 1981. Production is expected to fall slightly again in 1982, but fears that oil reserves will be rapidly exhausted have been somewhat allayed by recent discoveries wich could double output in the middle 1980s. With the aid of the Arab countries, the Government is examining the possibility of building a new petroleum refinery with a productive capacity of 200,000 bpd. Gas output is expected to total 300 million cubic metres in 1982, 10% below the 1981 level.

Manufacturing

Manufacturing industries were for a long time little developed except those concerned with food production (semolina, olive, oil, fish canning, flour mills, wine) but the discovery of oil in moderate quantities in the mid-1960s and the establishment of a petrochemical industry started a rapid advance in the country's industrial economy. Textile plants have been established at Sudan, Qasr Hallal, and Al Munastir. Naval construction has been reactivated at Bizerte. There is an iron and steel plant at Manzil bu Ruqaybah (Menzel-Bourgulba), inaugurated in 1966 and capable of an annual production of 100,000 tons, a sugar refinery at Bajah; a cellulose factory at al Qasrays and an assembly plant for trucks and autos at Susah. On 1968 the government embarked on the construction of a large new industrial complex in the south around the Qabis Oasis where crude oil was being tapped. This involved a fertilizer plant, based on gypsum, a potash plant, a power station, an oil refinery, and a new port.

The Sixth Plan

The Sixth Plan (1982-1986) provides for a record investment of 16 billion US dollars, twice that of the Fifth Plan, and an annual growth in GDP averaging 7%. Priorities are the creation of 320,000 jobs; agricultural development, particularly self-sufficiency in cereals; oil prospecting and a reduction in energy consumption in an effort to avoid a possible energy deficit in the second half of the decade; an increasing tourist accommodation by an additional 40,000 beds. It is envisaged that some 22% of expenditure under the plan will be financed from abroad. In particular, Arab aid, which to date has been spent mainly on the tourist industry, is to be directed to projects in the oil and manufacturing sectors.

Oil and gas production

Oil production is expected to reach 5.5 — 6.5 million tons during 1981-85, but will decline to 3.5 million tons in 1990. In contrast, production of natural gas is projected to rise from 0.4 million tons in 1980 to 1.4 — 2 million tons in 1986.

Tunisia's main oil producing fields are El-Borma and Ashtart; natural gas is produced mainly from the El-Borma field.

Oil and gas exploration activity will be intensified during 1982-86 with government support. Finds in 1979 have increased the interest of oil companies in Tunisia's onshore and offshore regions.

Refining

Following the expansion of the existing refinery, Tunisia's refining capacity grew from one million tons to 1.5 million tons annually. The refinery output, however, falls short of the country's requirements of kerosene, asphalt, fuel oil and LPG. This shortfall is met by imports of refined petroleum products which reached 1.11 million tons in 1980.

Projects under construction

Projects which are under construction include:

— Expansion of the existing refinery to raise its annual capacity from 1.5 million tons to 6.5 million tons.

— El-Borma field development project for extracting LPG (210,000 tons) and natural gasoline (50,000 tons) from associated gas.

— Ashtart project for the production of LPG (450,000 tons) and natural gasoline.

Since independence, the education system in Tunisia has grown rapidly. Over the 15-year period 1956-1972, primary education enrolments have risen, from about 200,000 to more than 900,000 pupils. During the 1960s alone, the number of pupils in secondary schools has increased from roughly 35,000 to 180,000, and the number of students in the University of Tunis has more than quadrupled, from 2,200 to 13,000, including 2,000 girl students.

Development projects -In 1981 enrolment totalled 1,370,000 students.

By 1981 capital investments for Primary Schools will have totalled 3.3 million Dinars - Secondary Schools 43. 9 million Dinars -Universities and higher education 53 million Dinars, with enrolment rising to 162,000 - 248,000 and 30,000 respectively.

HEALTH

Not less than 89.9 million Dinars have been allocated to the improvement of the health services under the 1977 -1981 plan, in addition to 76.2 million Dinars for family planning and physiotherapy.

Five new hospitals are being set up, respectively at Jendouba, Medicine, Gabes, Mahdia, Kasserine, besides five auxiliary hospitals.

Medical staff will comprise 2,200 doctors (1 doctor to each 3,000 inhabitants) and a large number of nurses, dieticians and other specialists.

TOURISM

Office National du Tourisme Tunisien: Est. 1958; 1 Av. Mohammed V, Tunis.

Tourism has been the fastest expanding sector of Tunisia's economy. The country's eastern coast, previously largely deserted, now has many hotels and other facilities for tourists. Tunisia also contains many monuments of Roman antiquity such as the Colosseum and Sfax and the ruins of the city of Dugga between Tunis and the Algerian frontier. There is a fine Roman collaction in the Bardo Museum in Tunis. From the Arab period the great mosque of Qairawan and the reservoirs of that city are notable.

When the 1977—1981 development plan has been completed in 1981 accomodation capacity will have risen to 82,000 beds as against 64,000 in 1976, overnight stay will have grown by 7% annually, with incoming visitors totalling 1,500,000 per annum compared with 1,000,000 in 1976.

GEOGRAPHY

The United Arab Emirates, formerly known as the Trucial States, extend along the coast of the Gulf eastwards from the base of the Qatar peninsula to a short way beyond Ras al Khaimah. The Sheikhdoms which form the UAE are Abu Dhabi, Dubai, Sharjah, Ajman, Umm al Qawain, Ras al Khaimah and Fujairah. They cover an area of approximately 33,000 square miles. Abu Dhabi is the largest and richest and has an area of about 25,000 square miles. The remaining Sheikhdoms, known for convenience as the "Northern Emirates", cover an area of about 8000 square miles and are situated in the northeast corner of the territory.

Six of the seven states have their capitals on the coast which sweeps northward end eastward from the border of Qatar to Cape Musandam on the Straits of Hormuz, the entrance to the Gulf. The seventh, Fujairah, is on the eastern side of the Musandam Peninsula, outside the Straits and facing the Gulf of Oman. The extreme tip of the Peninsula-wild, mountainous and forbidding — is inhabited by the Shihuh, a people quite distinct from those of the United Emirates, and is a dependency of the Sultanate of Oman. The mountains which form the backbone of the Musandam Peninsula are one of the geographical features of the UAE.

The other is the desert to the west, much of it in Abu Dhabi State, with the oases of Buraimi and Liwa.

Sailing along the coast from Qatar you would see first of all Abu Dhabi, with the longest coast and the largest area; then Dubai; and then, in quick succession, Sharjah, Ajman, Umm al Qaiwain, and Ras al Khaimah. Most of these places are built on creeks which provide fine harbours for the local boats, and in the old days were the hiding-places of corsairs and the bases from which war-fleets operated.

Important archaeological discoveries have been made at Umm al Nar, on the coast a little way to the east of Abu Dhabi. This is the site of a port dating from the period between 3000 and 2000 BC. Many examples have been found of pottery made in southern Baluchistan, of a type found also in Ur and other Sumerian sites in Iraq. A large stone house has been unearthed and also a number of stone graves of exceptionally fine masonry. There are relief carvings of various animals, and also painted ornamentation. The same type of graves have been found in the Al Ain oasis, and it seems that Umm al Nar was a transhipment port for goods being transported to and from the coast of the Gulf of Oman via the oasis. The object of the exercise would be to by-pass the Straints of Hormuz, which can be very dangerous for small vesels. There is evidence pointing to the existence of a similar by-pass route starting at Ras al Khaimah.

Abu Dhabi

Abu Dhabi is by far the largest of the United Arab Emirates, covering an area of 26,000 square miles. The population at the 1975 census was 236,000, including foreign residents. The town of Abu Dhabi is on an island separated from the mainland by a narrow creek. It was settled by the Bedu tribe of Beni Yas rather more than two centuries ago, when they discovered water there. The mainland is mostly desert, which is adorned by vegetation which springs up after winter rain, and relieved also by two oases, or groups of oases. Far to the south the gravel desert of Abu Dhabi blends into the sand-sea of Saudi Arabia's Rub'al Khali, the dreaded "Empty Quater". The two oases are Al Ain, and Liwa. The latter is not easily accessible,but Al Ain, 90 miles east of Abu Dhabi, is quickly reached by a new road. The oasis, cooler and less humid than Abu Dhabi, has through the centuries been an important meeting place of many desert routes. In its circle, which is roughly 6 miles across, are 9 villages, of which 3 belong to the sultanate of Oman. Buraimi is the name of one those three, and that is why Al Ain (also a village) is the name preferred in Abu Dhabi for the oasis as a whole.

Abu Dhabi is the scene of an oil boom even more extraordinary than that experienced by Kuwait.

Dubai

Dubai is Abu Dhabi's next door neighbour to the north and east, and it has the first of the splendid creeks which are a feature of the coast up to Cape Musandam and the Straits of Hormuz. The State occupies some 1500 square miles of flat and largely featureless coastal plain with a 45 mile seaboard on the Gulf. It has a cosmopolitan population estimates at 206,861 people, with sizeable communities of Indians, Pakistanis, Iranians, Europeans and Americans. All but a very small proportion are concentrated in the city area.

Most, if not all, of Dubai's early history is lost, although its natural harbour and strategic position could not have escaped the notice of Alexander the Great, whose admirals explored the Gulf. Down the centuries, trading vessels of many nations have anchored off the creek. In those days, Dubai was mainly known for its pearling industry and fine quality of its pearls. By the latter part of the 18th century the coastal tribes had acquired significant power and consequent influence over the sea lanes of the area. This influence was manifested in a penchant for piracy. Though this profession was profitable and indeed honourable for the coastal tribes, it was viewed with extreme disfavour by the nations whose ships were plundered. Particularly vulnerable were the many British vessels trading to the east from Europe and constant instances of piracy eventually led to armed intervention in 1820. The result was a Treaty of Peace and Friendship with Britain which was to last officially until the formation of the United Arab Emirates in 1971,but which, in spirit, is as strong as ever.

A significant event in Dubai's trading history was at the very start of this century, when the Persian port of Lingeh, on the other side of the Gulf, was an important rival. The activities of the Lingeh merchants had for heavy taxation and other official harassment. They decided to move, lock, stock and barrel to the freer and more congenial atmosphere of the Trucial Coast and they settled in Dubai. Shaikh Rashid's grandfather welcomed them and encouraged their commercial endeavours, thus creating one of the cornerstones of Dubaian commercial expertise and entreprise.

The Ruler of Dubai is His Highness Shaikh Rashid bin Said al Maktoum, who has concentrated on building up his State to be the foremost port and commercial centre for the whole coast. This shrewd, far-sighted and much respected man has been Head of State since 1959 and since 1939 had taken a prominent part in government. His policy is a continuation and development of that of his grandfather who first began to build up Dubai's commercial position in the early part of this century. Shaikh Rashid's ancestors from the Beni Yas tribe left Abu Dhabi in 1833 and settled in Dubai to begin the long and successful development of the area.

Dubai's original prosperity came from trade-but it was the dicovery of oil in 1966 that provided funds to finance many of the State's major projects.

The lesser sheikhdoms are:

Sharjah, which is only a short drive along the highway from Dubai, is at an earlier stage of development. It has an area of approximately 1000 square miles and a population of rather more than 85,000. It was a refuelling place on the earliest air routes to India, and well known to the RAF since 1940. Much commerce has left its port for Dubai. Ajman is the smallest and perhaps the most charming of the United Emirates (100 square miles, population 21,566). Umm al Qaiwain is three times as large, and has a population of approximately 16,879. Ras al Khaimah (600 square miles, population 57,282) has a fine creek, and has always been famed for its seafaring men. Under the leadership of the Qasimi family it, with Sharjah, were pre-eminent among the states of the coast for much of the 19th century. A drive along the coast road from Dubai to Ras-al-Khaimah, where the flat, stark landscape gives way to hills and palmgroves, will help the visitor greatly to get the feel of the country. The Agricultural Research Station at Ras-al-Khaimah is a noteworthy modern institution. Fujairah on the Gulf of Oman was also, like Ras-al-Khaimah, at one time a possession of the Qawasim, and has an area or 450 square miles, with a population of 26,498

Religion

Islam is the principal religion.

There is an Anglican church and a Roman Catholic church in Abu Dhabi Town with resident chaplains; there is an Anglican and a Roman Catholic church in Dubai.

Official Public Holidays (1983)

Friday is the weekly holiday; Saturday and Sunday are normal working days.

The dates of the religious festivals are variable and follow the Islamic calendar, which is based on a cycle of 12 lunar months of 29 or 30 days each, making a 354 day year. Every year the religious periods fall 10 or 11 days earlier. Ramadan, the great religious fast, lasts for about four weeks during the ninth month of the year. The exact dates for Moslen holidays depend on the Moslem calendar Al-Hijra (whose name commemorates the emigration of the Prophet from Mecca to Medina) and on the sighting of the New Moon. Main holidays are: Eid al Fitr (11-13 July); Eid al Adha, the feast of Sacrifice (17-20 September); The Prophet's birthday (16 December); Ashura-day of mourning for Shi'ite Muslims (16 October); Muslim New Year Day (7 October).

Climate

During the summer the heat is intense along the low-lying coast of the Gulf. This, combined with the high humidity and hot, moist air drifting in from the sea can be extremely trying. Between July and September the temperature frequently rises to over 100° and 110° is not uncommon. By contrast, the climate during the six winter months from November to April is very pleasant with warm, sunny days (usually between 50° and 60°) and cool, occasionally chilly, nights. The coolest month is January, with mean temperatures of approximately 50°F in Bahrain and 60°F in Muscat. The temperature of the sea drops considerably in winter and it is not generally warm enough to make swimming agreeable. Rainfall is scanty, averaging about four inches a year, mainly between December and February. One of the less pleasant aspects of winter life in some of the Gulf States is the Shamal, the hot, sand-laden wind that blows off the desert for days at a time, which can be rather trying to the nerves.

Foreign relations

Since its formation in 1971, the UAE's main task has been to find its proper role in the international community, a role dictated by the tradition position and its economic resources.

Although Bahrain and Qatar decided on their own independence before the UAE was formed, this has not meant that the close ties which already existed between the individual Emirates and these two close neighbours have been lessened. With another close neighbour, the sultanate of Oman, there is a determination to cooperate and in May 1972 the UAE President, Shaikh Zayd visited Muscat for talks with Sultan Qaboos on measures to re-inforce this cooperation.

Shaikh Zayed has also been active in 1972 in extending the traditional good relations between the UAE and the Arab states beyond the Gulf. In February and March he visited Sudan, Libya and Syria, and both King Hussain of Jordan and President Numeiry of Sudan have paid state visits to the UAE. Diplomatic relations have already been established with Egypt, Iraq, Kuwait, Lebanon, Sudan, Tunisia and Yemen Arab Republic and Syria.

Relations with Europe

The UAE's relations with other states are becoming increasingly cordial. Traditionnally, its closest ties in Europe have been with Britain, where Shaikh Zayed is a frequent visitor, but diplomatic relations have been established with France,West Germany and the Netherlands; with Iran, its neighbour in the Gulf; and with the UAE's main trade partners outside Europe, Japan and the USA.

THE PROVISIONAL CONSTITUTION (2 DECEMBER 1971)

The provisional Constitution of the United Arab Emirates promulgated on 2 December 1971 provides for the setting up of three basic government bodies : 1) the Supreme Council, 2) the Federal Council of Ministers and 3) the Federal National Council.

Islam is declared the official religion, the Shariah a major source of legislation, and Arabic the official language.

«Equality, social justice, law, order and security, with equal opportunities for all citizens, all of whom shall be bound together with solidarity, charity and love», are the foundations of society, with the family at its base. Education, compulsory at the elementary stage is free and health services are guaranteed to all.

The principal subjects over which the Federal Government has responsibility both for legislation and for execution are laid down in the Constitution as:

Foreign affairs: Federal armed forces and defence: Safeguarding the security of the Federation from within and without: Security, law and Government affairs in the permanent capital: Affairs of federal employees and the judiciary: Federal finance, taxes, fees and royalties: Federal general loans: Postal, Telegraph and wireless services: Road construction and maintenance where routes are envisaged as main highways: Air traffic control and licensing of aircraft and pilots: Education: Public health and medical services: Currency: Weights and measures: Electrical services: Federal nationality, passports, residence and immigration: Federal property: Statistics and census for federal purposes: Federal information.

THE GOVERNMENT

The Supreme Council

The Supreme Council has responsibility for general policy in all matters and for the ratification of federal laws. The Council is composed of the Rulers of the seven Emirates and, on matters of substance, decisions require the support of five members including the Rulers of Abu Dhabi and Dubai.

Ruler of Sharjah: Sheikh Sultan Bin Muhamad Al-Qasimi

Ruler of Ras Al-Qkhaimah: Sheikh Saqr Bin Muhamad Al-Qasimi

Ruler of Umm Al-Quwain: Sheikh Rashid Bin Ahmed Al-Mu'Alla

Ruler of Ajman: Sheikh Humaid Bin Rashid Al Nu'Aimi

Ruler of Dubai: Sheikh Rashid Bin Said Al-Maktum.

Ruler of Abu Dhabi: Sheikh Zayed Bin Sultan Al-Nahayan

Ruler of Fujairah: Sheikh Hamad Bin Muhammad Al-Sharqi.

The Federal Council

The Federal Council of Ministers has executive authority, initiates federal laws and implements them, and is collectively responsible to the Supreme Council. The Prime Minister is appointed by the President, after consultation with his fellow-members of the Supreme Council, and the President also appoints the individual ministers, on the advice of the Prime Minister.

The Federal National Council

The role of the Federal National Council, which held its first meeting in February 1972 and began its full new session in November 1972, is empowered to discuss and, if necessary, propose amendments to federal laws tabled for approval by the Council of Ministers but it has also wide powers to debate other matters of public interest. The National Council's 40 members are chosen, for a two-year term, by each Emirate in the manner best suited to it. Abu Dhabi and Dubai are represented by eight members each, Sharjah and Ras al-Khaimah by six members each, and Ajman, Fujairah and Umn al-Qaiwain by four each.

The oil industry

The Emirates are the world's fourth largest oil producers, with offshore and onshore oil reserves representing a volume of 30 billion barrels, and reserves of associated gas estimated to be in the order of 23 (twenty-three) trillion cubic feet, besides as yet unassessed deposits of nonassociated natural gas.

Offshore production is mainly in the hands of the Abu Dhabi National Oil Company (ADNOC). The onshore is the Abu Dhabi Petroleum Company (ADPC), in which ADNOC has 60 percent stock, the rest being held by a consortium of Western firms.

In 1982 it would be just over twenty years since the first crude oil shipment left Das Island.

In 1969 Abu Dhabi was joined by Dubai, the federation's second producer whose entire output is controlled by the state, represented by the Dubai Petroleum Company. Accompanying the oil effort is the development of its natural gas potential expected to assume growing importance in the coming decade. This is being handled by the Abu Dhabi Gas Liquefaction Company (ADGLC) which maintains a plant on Das Island. When fully operational the plant will process 550 million cubic feet of gas a day. This amounts to 2.2 milion ton of liquified natural gas a year. In addition, the Das project will supply one million tons of propane and butane and 220,000 tons of pentanes as well as sulphur. Officials describe the Das Island project as a "monument to modern engineering and technology".

Sharjah, that amazing emirate which has blossomed out of oblivion in recent years, accounts for one percent of the UAE oil production, while Ras Al Khaimah's contribution of 6,500 barrels a day started early in 1978.

At the present, slightly reduced, rate of exploitation, oil reserves are supposed to last about 20 years before production starts declining.

Agriculture

Although neither the terrain nor the climate of the United Arab Emirate encourages agriculture, great strides have been made in recent years.

Agriculture has always existed where water has been available, but it has been on a very limited scale. This has been mostly in the Emirate of Ras al-Khaimah, where there are relatived plentiful under ground water supplies originating in the neighbouring Oman mountains.

Another area of considerable agriculture is the Bureimi Oasis, divided Sultanate of Oman. There is also the Liwa Oasis hidden amongst the towering sand dunes far into the interior of Abu Dhabi. Finally in the mountain valleys of Fujeirah and the coastal plains of Sharjah and Fujeirah on the Gulf of Oman there are numerous date gardens, producing dates of the highest quality. A high proportion of the population are engaged in agriculture, and it is estimated that 15 per cent of the territory of Ras al-Khaimah is under cultivation

Fishing

Within the Arabian Gulf the best fishing grounds are off the coast of Ras al-Khaimah, where the currents swirling through the Straits of Hormuz create good feeding. In this area are export possibilities for sardine and anchovy, for fish meal and canning, tuna for freezing or canning, red mullet, snapper, bream and rock cod.

Fishing provides a living for the majority of the population of Ajman and Um-al-Qaiwain, the two smallest Emirates of the UAE.

Foreign Trade

For centuries the Gulf has been a busy trading thoroughfare, an important stage on the route linking Europe, India and the Far East, and Arabian Gulf merchants have always had reputation for shrewdness and entreprise. Now in the 1970, oil wealth, with the resultant intense activity in all sectors of the UAE economy, is attracting the attention of the world's exporters to an unprecedented extent.

More than half of the UAE's total oil exports go to Japan (which alone takes over a quarter), the United States and France.

Japan also heads the list of suppliers followed by the United Kingdom, the United States and West Germany; trade with neighbouring countries is very low.

Balance of Payments

As the U.A.E. balance of payments position is largely determined by developments in its oil sector, the sharp increase in the value of oil exports in 1980 raised the current account surplus balance from $ 5.5 billion in 1979 to $ 10.3 billion. This surplus declined by $ 1.3 billion in 1981.

Development Strategy

In line with U.A.E. development strategy, which focuses on diversifying the productive base of the economy, a number of export-oriented, capital-intensive industries based on the country's gas and oil resources have been established.

The Ruweiss refinery, with an initial capacity of 120,000 barrels per day, started operations in 1981, and a new gas liquefaction plant started production in Abu Dhabi. The Ruweiss plant produced 1.2 million tons of natural gas liquids, most of which was exported to Japan, and it will have an annual output of 5 million tons of butane, propane, and other gas liquids when in full operation.

In addition to these projects, construction has started on a fertilizer plant, to be completed in 1983, and the aluminium smelter in Dubai has reached its full capacity of 135,000 tons, of aluminium ingots per year.

Also planned for the Ruweiss project are gas-processing plants for local consumption and power generation, petrochemical plants, and an iron and steel plant.

The Banking System

Although an active banking industry has existed in the Gulf Emirates, especially Dubai, for many years, the present monetary system in the U.A.E. dates from the establishment of the Currency Board in May 1973 and the simultaneous issuance of the U.A.E.'s own currency the dirham (Dh), to replace the Bahrain dinar and the Qater-Dubai riyal previously in circulation. The par value of the rapid expansion of the economy posed serious strains on the commercial banking sector culmination in the suspension of two banks in May1977 by the Currency Board.

A Central Bank was established in December 1980, in response to the need for a strong monetary authority as evidenced by the financial difficulties of 1977. During its first year of operation, the Central Bank has sought to coordinate U.A.E. fisçal and monetary policies through the formation of a consulative committee composed of representatives from the Ministries of Finance and Planning and the Central Bank. Measures have also been taken to strengthen the commercial banking system. The number of branches of foreign banks, in view of the overbanked structure of the system; tightened its auditing provisions; and issued regulations regarding the minimum paid-up capital, the capital total assets ratio, and the reserve level of banks, as well as provisions for the licensing of money changers.

TRANSPORT

Roads

The towns of Abu Dhabi and Al-Ain are both examples of disciplined planning, with handsome public buildings, adequate housing, water and electricity and well-maintained roads that permit a smooth flow of vehicules at all hours of the day. The two towns are linked by a four-lane motorway, and work has been completed on an 80-mile road between Abu Dhabi to the Emirates' western border with Qatar. A bridge joining Abu Dhabi Island to the mainland, and replacing the original causeway, was opened in 1980.

Shipping

Three subsidiaries of the Abu Dhabi National Oil Company are concerned with port maintenance and maritime transport :

In June 1979 the first of the 66 planned berths of Dubai port development programme was opened. The project, which cost over US $ 1.6 billion, includes tankers berths for gas and oil, dry cargo berths, general cargo and roll-on, roll-off facilities, refrigerated cargo handling and warehouses.

Other port development, stimulated by severe congestion experienced up to late 1977, has taken place at port Rashid where the 37-berth complex was completed in 1980 and is already operational, at Mina Zayed in Abu Dhabi, at port Khalid in Sharjah where a doubling of facilities is taking place and at Mina Saqr in Ras al Khaimah where a new five-berth port is nearing completion. Fujairah, hitherto the only Emirate lacking its own port facilities, is planning a 14-berth development.

Civil aviation

The UAE has three international airports. The «senior» in Sharjah, started operationg just 45 years ago as a staging post for Britains's Royal Air Force and for airliners run by Imperial Airways(now BA).

It runs an imposing «taxi service» to most parts of the UAE as well as serving as a junction for flights to all quarters of the world.

Dubai's international airport was opened in May 1971 after major extensions and improvements to the original airfield, and at once proceeded to establish a record in the number of passengers making use of it during the year.

The UAE's third international airport, at Abu Dhabi, is equipped to receive jumbo jets and covers a bigger area than any other airport in the Gulf region: today it is a highly valued transit point for most of the world's major airlines.

GULF AIR

The Gulf region has its own internal airline: It was originally owned jointly by the Government of Abu Dhabi, Bahrain and Qatar and by B.O.A.C., and in 1971 the Sultanate of Oman joined them. At present the airline operates scheduled services to Paris, London, and other capital cities.

Good progress has been made in education in the past decade in the Emirates that comprise the UAE.

The rapid expansion and development of education over a comparatively few years has brought problems, not least of which has been the provision of qualified teachers in sufficient numbers to meet the ever-increasing demands of the newly created schools. In this respect the Government of Kuwait has rendered considerable assistance, particularly in the northern Emirates. Kuwait has helped in the in the building and equipping, as well as the staffing, of schools over recent years.

Free transport is provided for those living far from school - necessary in these Emirates where the population is widely scattered - and all schools provide books and other accessories free.

School clothing and meals are also free, and since July 1972 education has been compulsory for all children over the age of six.

Teacher's and vocational training schools are available in the more advanced areas of the UAE, and the more promising students are awarded scholarships for university education abroad.

GEOGRAPHY

The Republic of YEMEN lies at the south end of the Red Sea between Asia and the Aden Protectorate. The country may be divided into 3 main topographical zones: the Tihama, the Central Highlands and the Eastern Plateau. The Tihama or coastal strip is narrow, hot, and dry, with the ports of Luhaiya, Hodaida and Mocha.

Most of the country is plateau with summits of 10,000 ft and more, and constitutes the most fertile part of Arabia, with intense terrace cultivation.

The area of the Yemen Republic is approximately 190,000 sq. km. and its population has been estimated at between 5,500,000 and 6,000,000 as no census has ever taken place. The capital Sana'a which rises to an altitude of 7,260 ft on al-Jehal plateau has a population of 100,000. Taëz (altitude 4,600 ft) of lesser importance has a population of around 85,000. Other towns are: Ibb (6,275 ft), Yerim (8,600 ft), Dhamar (7,650 ft). Before 1962, marking the overthrow of the Imam and the declaration of the Republic by Marshall Sallal, Sana'a was a tumble-down old city, with no roads worthy of the name, no sanitation and no means of communications except the camel. Today, Sana'a is gradually assuming the characteristics of a modern town, with a Municipal Corporation, metalled roads, hospitals, schools, and banks.

Climate

Climate varies with altitude. The coastal plain is extremely hot and humid in summer but more pleasant in winter. The highlands are much more agreable in summer, though there is occasional frost and snow in winter.

Rainfall can be as high as 35 inches per year in the mountains and 15-20 inches in the plateaux, but is a mere 5 inches on the plain.

Public holidays (1983)

Eid al Fitr (10 July); Revolution Day (26 September) PDRY National Day 14 October; Eid al Adha (16-20 September); al Hijra Muslim New Year (7 October); Mulid a Nabi (Prophet's birthday) (16 December); Labour Day (May 1); Anniversary of the Corrective Movement (13 June).

Population

Besides the Saidi majority, there are smaller groups of Sunni Moslems, and until 1950 a fairly considerable community of Oriental Jews, who had been settled in south-west Arabia since the Dispersal. Many Jews were artisans in stone, glass, and metal, and in textiles: and Jewish quarters were a feature not merely of Sana'a, but also of many towns of western Arabia. Since 1949 most Jews have emigrated to Israel

Language and Religion

Arabic is the official language but some Yemenis speak English through working or studying abroad. Very few speak French or German. (An estimated 1 million Yemenis live abroad).

Islam is the State religion.

Like many areas in the Middle East, Yemen can look back on a long history of civilization and economic development. Assumed to be homeland of the legendary Queen of Sheba and known to the writes of antiquity as "Arabia Felix", it was famed in those days for its walled cities, lush fruit gardens and savoury spices.

The first historically documented large-scale political units in Yemen were the kingdoms of the Minaeans and Sabaeans. They were founded during the eighth century B.C. and existed simultaneously for some 500-600 years. At their height, they dominated much of Southern Arabia and controlled the Incense Trail, the routes over which Arabian frankincense, and Indian and East African goods were transported across or around the Arabian Peninsula to the Mediterranean Basin. To control the overland and waterborne trade, the Minaeans and Sabaeans established colonies in Northwestern Arabia and maintained supremacy at sea. Equally important, however, was the agricultural system that was created by the skill and ingenuity of these people. Terraced fields made possible the full utilization of scarce land and rainfall, while dams, the most famous of which was located at Marib on the eastern slope the Yemeni mountain range, diverted and stored flood water for irrigation. It was the surplus production in agriculture that freed a relatively large part of the population to control and carry out trade, to build cities and to develop a flourishing artisan industry. The collapse of the two kingdoms came with the rise of the Himyarites (115 B.C.) who inherited the Minaeo-Sabaean culture and trade and founded a kingdom which endured until the sixth century A.D. Under the Himyarite rulers, however, the might of South Arabia began to decline. After the fall of Palmyra in the third century A.D., the Himyarites tried to extend their influence to Central and Northern Arabia, in an attempt to insure the safety of the Incense Trail. But this expansion invited Persian retaliation which drove back the Himyarites to the South. An important factor in the decline was the spread of Christianity and Judaism which served as a decivise influence in the Kingdom and encouraged the Christian Abyssinians (Ethiopians) to occupy the Kingdom in the year 525 A.D. The Abyssinians were later driven out by the Persians, who in turn were superseded by Islam. It was at this period of political decline that much of the agricultural system in Southern Arabia fell into disuse, and the last break up of the Marib Dam around 570 A.D. signalled the end of a once great civilization.

Economic decline and stagnation continued in Yemen throughout the medieval and into modern times. The discovery of the sea route around Africa diverted most of the traditional trade while later invasions and occupations by the Ottoman Turks dealt serious blows to the livelihood of the local people. There are also indications of long-range deterioration in weather conditions which led to a reduction in the agricultural potential. While the economic strength of the country was thus eroded the population itself kept growing over the centuries. The result was a steady decline in the standard of living and growing pressure to emigrate. Many Yemenis left their country during this period and settled down in East Africa, other Middle Eastern countries and even the Far East.

It is only twenty years ago that the stage was set for an economic revival of Yemen. In September 1962, units of the Yemeni Army occupied the palace of the Imam, the traditional ruler of the country. The revolutionary forces, supported by Egypt, rapidly gained control of Sana'a and other principal areas, and established the Yemen Arab Republic (YAR). Egypt sent troops and supplies to help combat the deposed Imam Badr, who had fled north where, with the help of Saudi Arabia and Jordan, he raised Royalist forces to oppose the Republic.

Fighting between Republicans and Royalists continued until mid 1963 when a disengagement agreement was negotiated between Saudi Arabia and Egypt; disagreement over implementation brought a renewal of hostilities later that year, Saudi Arabia and Egypt reached renewed agreement in principe towards a settlement in 1964 and again in 1965, but the agreements where not implemented. After the Arab summit conference in August 1967, Egyptian troops were withdrawn.

Almost at once the Egyptian supported regime of President Abdullah Al-Sallal was ousted and moderate republican leaders rallied to the defence of Sana'a against a final Royalist siege of the city. By 1968 the siege was broken and Republican leaders began a long, but eventually successful effort of reconciliation with Royalist tribes and their Saudi supporters. Saudi Arabia finally recognized the Republic in mid-1970, when Royalist leaders accepted integration under the republican regime.

Subsequent republican governments terminated Yemen's isolation from the rest of the world by opening the country to new social and economic concepts and values and to foreign products and technologies. Contacts with bilateral and international aid donors were established as the various Yemeni governments attempted to remain non-aligned in Arab and international affairs. Presently, Yemen receives economic aid from Western and Eastern countries (though the relative share of the latter has been declining) and above all from Arab donors.

More recently, especially since the quadrupling of international oil prices at the beginning of 1974, there has been an unprecedented increase in personal cash incomes based mainly on remittances by Yemenis who went to work in Saudi Arabia and the Gulf States. It is estimated that workers' remittances rose from some $40 million in 1969/70 to over $800 million in 1976/77 and $ 1,500, on average per annum since then. Largely as a result of these cash inflows YAR's per capital GNP has more than doubled in real terms since 1969/70 reaching a level of about $ 390 in 1976/77, $ 580 in 1978, before declining to $ 420 in 1979/80.

Steps towards unification

Steps towards a merger of North Yemen and South Yemen, proposals for which had originally been made in October 1972 and had been revived in March 1979, were taken in late 1981, when a series of talks between President Ali Abdullah Saleh (North Yemen) and President Ali Nasser Mohammed (South Yemen) resulted in the compilation of statutes for the executive functioning of a united state and the draft of a constitution. A contentious issue in relations between the two countries was the activity of the North Yemeni opposition, the National Democratic Front (NDF), which was based in Aden (the capital of South Yemen) and was involved in armed conflict with the North Yemen Government; the desire of President Saleh's Government to bring the NDF under control was believed to have accelerated the resumption of negotiations on possible unification.

A meeting of the two Presidents was held in TAIZ (North Yemen) on Sept. 14, following which a joint statement was issued referring to the «achievements and practical steps along the road of restoring Yemeni unity by peaceful and democratic means» already attained. The statement also recorded that the two Presidents (i) stressed the importance of working towards unity and welcomed new joint ventures; (ii) endorsed the continuing work of the join committees; (iii) appreciated the exchange of visits between various institutions; (iv) «noted with increasing concern... the continued heightening of tension» in the Middle East and emphasized their condemnation of the 1978 Camp David peace agreements and support for the Palestine Liberation Organization (PLO); and (v) renewed their support for the non-aligned movement.

Further unification negotiations took place on Nov. 23 in Kuwait (Where the provisional unification agreement of March 1979 had been signed), as an adjunct to which a ceasefire between the North Yemen Government and the NDF was signed. President Saleh in turn travelled to Aden on Nov. 30 in response to an invitation extended by President Mohammed in September. The talks lasted until Dec. 2 and a further co-operation and co-ordination agreement was signed.

The agreement reached at the Aden talks provided for the establishment of a «Yemen Council», a joint Ministerial Committee and a Secretariat as the executive organization of the unified state and for greater policy co-ordination between the two parts.

PROVISIONAL CONSTITUTION

(Published June 19th, 1974)

In the name of the people, the Chairman of the Command Council, having taken cognizance of Command Council Proclamation No. 1 for 1974, Command Council Proclamation No. 4 for 1974 suspending the Constitution, and Command Council Proclamation No. 5 for 1974 increasing the membership of the Command Council, and desiring to consolidate the bases of authority during the transitional period and to regulate the rights and duties of all employees in a manner conducive to fruitful production to raise the country to the level which we all hope it will attain, we announce in the name of the people that during the transitional period the country will be governed in accordance with the following rules:

Chapter One: General Principles: the State:

Article 1: Yemen is an Arab, Islamic, and independent state enjoying full sovereignty. Its system is republican. The Yemeni people are a part of the Arab nation.

Article 2: The people are the source of all authority.

Article 3: Islam is the state religion and Arabic the official state language.

Article 4: The Islamic Sharia is the source of all laws.

Article 5: Yemen is an indivisible whole and its defence is the sacred duty of all citizens.

Chapter Two: Rights and Duties:

Article 6: Yemenis have equal rights and general duties.

Article 7: Personal freedom is guaranteed in accordance with the provisions of the law.

Article 8: There shall be no crime and no penalty except as laid down by law and there shall be no penalty for acts except those committed after the promulgation of the law (applying to them).

Article 9: Homes are inviolate: it is therfore inadmissible to enter them except in such instances as prescribed by the law.

Article 10: The confiscation of funds is prohibited, except within the confines of the law.

Article 11: No person's property shall be expropriated except in the public interest, in the instances prescribed by the law, and with just compensation to the person.

Article 12: The citizens have the right to express their thoughts by means of speech, writing, or voting within the confines of the law.

Article 13: Places of worship and learning have immunity which cannot be violated except in instances required by security needs and as prescribed by the law.

Chapter Three: The System of Government:

Articel 14: The Chairman of the Command Council shall assume the function of general sovereignty, particularly in taking the measures he deems necessary to protect the revolution and the republican regime.

Article 15: The Command Council shall assume the functions of the legislative and executive authorities of the state. It shall also have the power to lay down general policy and define its general framework.

Article 16: The Government is the executive and administrative body responsible for carrying out the state's general policy as laid down by the Command Council.

Article 17: The judiciary is independent, and there shall be no authority over it except for the law. Its verdicts shall be handed down and executed in accordance with the principles of the Sharia.

Chapter Four: Concluding Rules:

Article 18: All the rules determined by the laws, bylaws and decisions prior to the issuance of this constitutional declation shall remain in force unless they conflict with the rules of this declaration or unless they are amended or revoked.

Article 19: During the transitional period action shall be taken to restore constitutional and democratice life on sound bases in view of the need to provide the Yemeni people with a dignified life and a bright future.

Article 20: This constitutional declaration shall come into force from the date of its issuance and it shall be published in the Official Gazette.

JUSTICE

According to article 17 of the Constitution. Justice is administered on the principles of Sharia (Islamic law) by two courts:

Sharia Court: Sana'a; deals with cases related to Islamic Law.

Disciplinary Court: concerned with cases of maladministration and misappropriation of funds.

THE ECONOMY

The five-year plan

The Government's future development objectives are outlined in its first Five-Year Development Plan for the years 1976/77/1980/81. Building on the achievements of the Three-Year Programme (1973-73) the new Plan endeavours to further develop the country's human and natural resources; to strengthen the physical infrastructure; to raise the productivity of the commodity producing sectors; and to improve the standard of living of the people, giving priority to their basic needs for food, health services, education, water supply and other community services. To achieve its objectives the Government has launched an impressive investment and manpower training programme which it intends to carry out in close cooperation with foreign donors of capital and technical assistance. While continuing to rely on a market-oriented economic system the authorities foresee increasing collaboration between the public, cooperative and private sector.

The plan envisages a GDP growth of 8.2 percent p.a. and identifies investment opportunities in all major sectors, especially in transport, agriculture, industry, housing, education and public health. The overall investment targets are very ambitious. They envisage an increase in gross fixed capital formation from $ 170 million in 1975/76 to $ 1,230 million in 1980/81, implying an annual growth rate of almost 50 percent. The overall investment volume during the five years of the Plan is to be US $ 3.5 billion. Although not excessive for a country of YAR's size and population (it represents an annual amount of about US $ 150 per capital) the steep increase in investment proposed by the plan raises questions of technical feasibility and economic viability.

Agriculture

The climate of Yemen makes possible the successful cultivation of different crops. Potential farmland amounts to about 12 million acres but acreage actually under the plough is very small and requirements of local consumption, are estimated at 2.8 per cent annualy.

Possibilities of agricultural development are great as about 90 per cent of the Yemenis are shepherds and farmers. New trends in economic and agricultural development can result in a doubling of agricultural production. At present agricultural production provides employment for the vast majority of Yemenis and is reckoned to account for at least 70% of gross domestic product.

Despite predominance of grains, the distinctly different ecological zones of the country permit the growing of a wide range of crops. In the Highlands, temperate zone crops like potatoes, grapes and deciduous fruits are grown successfully. Various legumes such as beans and pulses are grown extensively. In the sub-tropical climate and relatively ample rainfall of the southern Uplands, sorghum, millet, maize, barley and wheat are the principal crops. But a large variety of fruits and vegetables are also grown, including bananas, citrus fruits, tomatoes and onions. In the Tihama Plain with its tropical climate, warm winters, hot summers, high humidity and scant rainfull, millet is the staple crop.

Probably the most important cash crop in YAR - and also the most controversial - is qat, a mildly narcotic plant which is widely consumed by the population. Although there are no statistics estimating the acreage planted to qat, the farm inputs used(e.g. water, fertilizer, labor) and the value of annual production, there is ample evidence suggesting that qat growing has expanded rapidly in recent years and that agricultural resources are increasingly diverted to this cop. Qat owes its popularity among farmers to a strong consumer demand, high prices and relatively low production cost. An indigenous plant well adapted to the climatic conditions of the highlands, qat is more drought resistant and requires less care than most competing crops, especially coffee. As a result, qat is extremely profitable to farmers and its returns generally exceed those of competing crops by a wide margin.

Industry

Industry in the YAR is at a very early stage of development. Although there are a large number of manufacturing enterprises, and employment in the construction industry is also substantial, most operations are very small, and are based on traditional production methods. However, in recent years a few medium-sized manufacturing firms have been established both in the public and private sector. A construction boom has led also to the emergency of several larger contracting companies.

The five largest industrial operations in the country are the Spinning and Weaving Corporation in Sana'a (currently employing around 1,500), the Yemen Company for Industry and Trades biscuit and sweet factory at Taiz (employing around 1,000), the same company's plastics and plastic foam factory also at Taiz (350), the public sector Cement Corporation at Bajil(300) and the National Tobacco and Matches Company (220). Other substantial operations are the public Cotton Corporation's Hodeida ginnery, the Yemen Company for Industry and Trade's ghee substitute plant at Taiz, and aluminium products plant at Taiz, and three soft drinks plants, two at Hodeida, one at Taiz. These eleven probably account for between a quarter and a third of total industrial output in turnover terms, and perhaps rather more in added value.(X)

TRANSPORT

It has only been two decades since the first links of a modern transport network were established in YAR. Until the late 1950s primitive tracks, suitable only for fourwheel drive vehicles and animal transport connected major towns and were the only means of land transport. Port facilities were limited to the ancient port of Mocha, which was only suitable for lighterage, and there was no air service within the country.

Roads

The highway network in the YAR now consists of somewhat over 4,000 km of roads of which 1,000 km are paved, about 1,200 km are gravel roads, and the rest earth tracks. The main trunk road network is nearly all paved and links the principal centers of population. However, a significant portion of the paved network, much of which traverses rugged terrain, is deteriorating due to axle overloading and rapid traffic growth. This has caused greater need for maintenance and for reconstruction of certain road sections.

Construction of highways and roads constitutes by far the single largest item in the overall investment programme of the Five-Year Plan. A total of YR 3 billion(about US $ 650 million) is to be spent for highway projects during the Five-Year period, of which YR 2.4 billion by the Central Government and YR 0.6 billion by Local Development Associations.

Ports

Prior to 1960 port facilities in the YAR were limited to the ancient port of Mocha, which was suitable only for lighterage, and much of the import traffic moved through the port of Aden. After the independence of the People's Democratic Republic of Yemen (PDRY) this traffic came to a virtual halt. However, by that time the YAR had its first deepwater port at Hodeidah, which started to go into operation in 1960.

The port of Hodeidah is located on the Red Sea, west of the capital city Sana'a, to which it is connected by a paved road. It presently handles about 90 percent of all legal imports coming through domestic ports, exclusive of petroleum, as well as the majority of Yemen exports. The port also handles substantially all the passenger traffic by sea which is, however, essentially limited to pilgrims during the Hajj.

In the port of Hodeidah six prefabricated warehouses have been erected, and the paved open area has been significantly enlarged. As a result, port congestion has been overcome and the waiting time for ships has been reduced to about one week.

The port of Mocha lies to the south of Hodeidah and west of the city of Taiz, to which it is connected by an engineered gravel and paved road. Although the port cannot directly berth even small ships, they can obtain anchorage with depths of 6.5 to 9.0 meters at a distance of 2 to 3 Km from the port. The present port facilities were constructed in 1955 and consist of a 160m long causeway and a pier 20m wide and 200m long. The causeway is connected to Mocha by a 1,850m access road across a long sandy island which is connected to the town proper by a short bridge.

Civil aviation

Three major airports at Sana'a, Taiz and Hodeida, service domestic and international travel, and airstrips at Saadah and Berat provide for domestic service in the North. There are a number of other, rudimentary, strips in the country some of which can handle DC-3s. The airport at Sana'a has a fairly new and generally adequate terminal, and has recently been equipped for night landings. It was originally built by the USSR and in 1973 re-equipped and modernized by the FRG. The runway, which was strengthened in 1975, is 3,200m long and 45m wide and can accomodate planes of the Boeing 707 class.

The Taiz airport, with a runway 2,400m long and 45m wide can handle two-engine and the smaller three-engine jets. The passenger terminal is fairly modern although small and without many amenities. However, a new terminal building is planned as are some navigation and runway improvements.

The People's Democratic Republic of Yemen occupies an area of 112,000 square miles with a coastline that stretches eastward from Ras Murad, opposite the island of Perim on the borders of the Sultanate of Oman, more than six hundred miles to the east. The inland depth of the country varies from about a hundred miles in the vicinity of Aden to a greater depth in the Hadhramut.

With a coastline mainly consisting of arid plains and broken up by steep mountain slopes and wadis carving their way through the coastal hills to the sea, the physical characteristics of the country provide interesting variations. Oases of cultivation and farms of different sizes are found around those wadis, particularly in Lahej and Abyan only a few miles from Aden, Meifa, and Gheil Bawazeer. Inside the hinterland high mountain tops, elevated plateaux and serrated ranges are remarkable characteristics of most of the western regions.

One of the most prominent features is the granitic Kaur ranges running roughly west-south to eastnorth-east. The Kaur Alawathil rises to 6,500 feet with peaks of 8,000 and 9,000 feet. The Kaur Alawaliq to the east stretches over long ranges of barren hills.

The Wadi Hadhramut stands out as the main feature of the eastern territory and cuts in half the broad belt of limestone tableland which rises to 6,000 feet on the southern side of the main wadi, and to some 3,500 feet on the northern side. The limestone rises in a series of steppes with many shallow depressions where farming is possible with rain water collected in pools or shallow pits, and are intersected by deep wadis. From the southern belt these wadis run south to the sea and north to the Wadi Hadhramut, many of them containing significant cultivated areas, notably the Wadi Doan, Wadi Amd, and Wadi Liesar, and from the northern belt the wadis run south to the Wadi Hedhramut and east - north - east to the southern fringe of the Rub al-Khali or Empty Quarter.

The Wadi Hajr is the only perennial river. It flows in an extensively cultivated valley, and it is the hot springs at Sidara, some sixty miles from its mouth, that is mainly responsible for its existence. The other wadis are dry during the greater part of the year, though at times they contain isolated pools and streams. When the rain falls heavily, the wadis suddenly become raging torrents, as much as 20 feet deep which may sweep everything before them.

For this reason the towns and villages are sited mainly on the side of flood beds and crops are cultivated on banks of alluvial soil brought down by previous floods out of reach of the main torrent although date palms and crops are sometimes planted in the flood bed itself in such wadis as Wadi Doan. The torrents, however, are often deflected for irrigating arid wadis and that should explain why only a few of them flow into the sea. The dry wadis are not totally unproductive, as they are important for their underground water which may be exploited by wells and, if the water is near enough to the surface, a sizeable area of land can be but under the plough.

The Wadi Hadhramut and some of its main tributaries is considered the major source of economic prosperity. The Wadi extends 350 miles from its source in al-Abr, about 3,000 feet above seal level to its mouth near Saihout. It is rich in its subsoil water and in certain areas near the sea the water is perennial. The cleft in the coastal range where the wadi breaks through the sea is a remarkably striking feature of the coastline.

The Governorates

For administrative purposes, the country is divided into six Governorates which now supersede the former «colony» and «protectorates». The six Governorates are:

1 - Aden, incorporating Bir Ahmad, Dar Saad, Imran, and the islands of Perim, Kamaran, Socotra, and Kuria Muria.

2 - Lahej, incorporating Subehi, Dahlla, Haushabi, Allawi Radfan, Shauabi, Halmeel, and Maflihi areas.

3 - Upper and Lower Yaffa, incorporating Fadhil, Audhali, Dathina, and Lower Aulaqi areas.

4 - Beihan, incorporating Upper Aulaqi, Wahidi, and north bited by as-Saya and Balobaid tribes and wadis of Armah and Dahr.

5 - Hadhramut, excluding the north-western parts which were incorporated into the fourth governorate.

6 - Mahra.

The islands

Three islands fall under the administration of the first Governorate:

Socotra, which lies in the south-eastern side of Aden is the largest in size with an area of 1,500 square miles.

Socotra has a population of 20,000 to 30,000 people. The majority are of Arab descent, whose ancestors migrated into the island in the VIIth century A.D.; the rest are either original Socotrans or of African origins.

Despite the lack of transportation and the apparent differences in the way of living of the people of Socotra, they constitute a cohesive unit with common social characteristics.

Kamaran, situated on the Red Sea, has an area of eighty square miles and a population of 2,000. Most of the people are fishermen. In recent years, the export of dried fish has increased considerably.

Perim, which lies at the entrance of the southern tip of the Red Sea, was occupied by the French in the XVIIIth century and by the British in 1861. Ships used to call at the island, where they were supplied with coal. When, after 1920, oil replaced coal as fuel for ships the importance of the island dwindled by the rise of Aden as a bunkering port.

Principal towns

Aden: - With a population of 300,000, Aden is the capital and is situated on the coast approximately 70 miles east of the junction of the Indian Ocean and the entrance to the Red Sea. The population are mainly Arabs but there are substantial Somali, Indian and Pakistani communities.

Aden is made up of:

a - Crater, built in and around the site of an extinct volcano whose highest peak rises to a height of 1,725 feet.

b - Khormaksar, a residential area near the airport on the peninsula connecting Aden town to the mainland.

c - Steamer Point and Ma'alia - two residential bussiness and shopping areas.

d - The Arab town and oasis of Shaikh Othman at the mainland end of the isthmus, which is a busy trading centre.

e - Little Aden, a second extinct volcano forming the other head of the bay which is Aden Harbour. A.B.P. Refinery is situated here.

f - Madinat Ach-Sha'ab, the administrative capital of the country. This is a collection of Government buildings standing in the desert between Shaikh Othman and Little Aden.

Mukulla, with a population of 50,000, is the only other town of any importance. It lies about 300 miles east of Aden between the Red Sea and the Oman border. It is the port and administrative centre for the fifth and sixth governorates (formerly known as the Eastern Aden Protectorate).

Smaller Towns - Other smaller towns are Seiyun, trading centre of the central area of the Hadhramut (fifth Governorate), Beihan (fourth Governorate) in the north-west, bordering on the Yemen Arab Republic, and Dhala (second Governorate) in the west.

The climate

The country is essentially hot but owing to the variety of its physical geography both extremes of temperature may be experienced. The coastal area have a humid atmosphere and are liable to heavy dews and early morning mist without sufficient rainfall. The highlands and steppes are dry.

On the coastal plains and in desert regions sandstorms are fairly frequent and dust veils are common. Winds in winter in the interior are strong by day but they die down at night.

Rainfall is scanty in most areas but it is more frequent in the winter months. When rain falls the barren hills and valleys spring to life with remarkable alacrity and afford a valuable pasture for camels and sheep, with torrential rain often deflected and used for irrigation purposes.

Public Holidays (1983)

The weekly holiday in the People's Democratic Republic of South Yemen is friday. All Government departments, business houses and most shops are closed. Some of the smaller shops are open in the mornings on Friday.

Public holidays observed by the Government are as follows: 4 days 26/29 January; 1 day (17 Feb.); 1 day (27 Feb.); 1 day (26 April); 1 day (1 May); National Day (14 Oct.) Id-al-Fitr (2/3 days); Eid al Fitr (11-13 July); Eid al Adha, feast of Sacrifice (17-20 September); Muslim New Year's Day (7 October); the Prophet's birthday (16 December).

Religion

Most of the population are Moslem, but there are a large number of Hindus, some Parsees, and a minority of Christians. There are both Protestant and Catholic churches in Aden.

HISTORY

The ancient Kingdoms of Yemen were known to Greeks and the Romans chiefly because of the famous "incense route" which brought the luxury of the East to the West, passed through their land. The fact that ancient Yemenis found the "incense route" profitable venture is attested by the lavish construction of their ancient buildings, forts and temples.

Of all the ancient kingdoms of Yemen, the kingdom of Saba (biblical Sheba), was the most powerful and enduring.

Historians ascribe the decline of the Kingdom to the bursting of the Marib dam in the early Christian era, but the major causes were probably the diversion of the spice trade from the incense route in the area, a diversion which must have brought about radical changes in social, political and economic conditions.

The Islamic Period

From the 7 th to the 16 th century, Yemen came under the sway of 12 successive Moslem princes, Amin Ben Daoud, was put to death when Aden was captured by the Turks.

Growth of Steam Navigation

The East India Company was trading in the Red Sea in the 18 th century and maintained a factory at Mocha to purchase coffee. New political considerations were taken into account when Napoleon landed in Egypt in 1798 and seemed to threaten India. Troops from Bombay occupied Perim, but since Perim was waterless and unsuitable for a garrison, they were moved to Aden. There they were received by the Sultan of Lahej, and in 1802 the British sent an ambassador from Calcutta to negotiate a commercial treaty with the Sultan.

The growth of steam navigation in the 19th century rendered it imperative to find a coaling station at the south end of the Red Sea. Negotiations were in progress for the purchase of Socotra when Captain Haines, who had orders to gain control of Aden against an annual payment, captured it from the Abdalis in 1839. The Sultan soon made peace and signed a treaty, being granted an annual stipend of 6,000 Maria Theresa dollars. From 1863 relations with Britain remained harmonious until 1958.

The establishment of the Aden Refinery brought vastly higher standards of living and attracted tribal immigrants; the population trebled in 15 years, over two-thirds being Arabs, while many were Yemeni immigrants drawn by Aden's expanding economy.

British policy set out to develop democratic instutions in Aden during the 1950s (a legislative council was inaugurated in 1947) to lead through phased local representation to self-rule. This provided opportunities to union leaders to grap at power that had lain with tribal, mercantile or religious families. A group that had adopted the Arab socialist line under the leadership of Abdallah al-Asnag launched a campaign against "monopolistic foreign companies" in a bid to oust Britain whose policy aimed at strengthening the Aden base for the protection of its oil interests and of security in the Red Sea and India Oceans.

Through strikes and demonstrations, the Aden TUC founded in 1956 caused such disruption of life in the colony that the government was forced in 1960 to pass a law forbidding strikes without a declaration from an industrial court. The British TUC, influenced by the Asnag group attacked the compulsory arbitration law and, by so doing, encouraged the ambitions of the Aden nationalists. with the prospet of a labour win in the 1964 elections in Britain nationalist agitation increased but was contained, until the British Government's decision to abandon Aden was made public in February 1966.

Rival Groups

Two rival political groups emerged: FLOSY (Front for the Liberation of Occupied South Yemen) was composed mostly of Adenese and western tribesmen; and NLF (National Liberation Front) which was led by discontended teachers, a class peculiarly susceptible to propaganda on Arabism and socialism.

Before leaving Aden, the British authorities under orders from London came to terms with the NLF rather than FLOSY, and in the bloody battle fought out between the tribal supporters of the two groups in Shaikh Othman, the NLF emerged as victors. The British withdrew on 29 November, and the NLF set up a government in Aden with Qahtan ach-Shaabi as its first president.

He was overthrown on June 22, 1969, in a bloodless transfer of power, his functions being collectively assumed by a five-man Presidential Council.

A draft Constitution approved by the ruling National Liberation Front and published on August 2 referred to South Yemen as a 'popular democratic republic' with Islam as its religion. Coming into effect on November 30, it provided for free and direct elections to a 101-member People's Supreme Council to be held before November 1971. On November 30 the country was officially named the People's Democratic Republic of Yemen.

Nationalisation of Foreign Firm

The nationalisation of foreign firms in Southern Yemen that was announced on November 27,1970, affected British, French, US, Pakistani, Jordanian and Indian firms operating Banking, commerce, ports, shipping, insurance and petroleum marketing. Of the 36 firms affected, 8 were banks, 5 were shipping companies, and 6 were trading companies. Shareholders and owners of firms taken over were compensated with 20 year bonds bearing a 2 per cent a year.

Foreign relations

The National Liberation Front (NLF) regime, the only avowedly marxist one in the Arab world, continued in 1974 its close association with the Soviet Union, China and, as a result of its revolutionary fervour within the Arab world and particularly towards the liberation of Oman, the country's tenuous ties with its neighbours were frequently strained.

One turning point in the history of the People's Democratic Republic of Yemen in 1976 was reached when on March 9 diplomatic relations were resumed with Saudi Arabia, which had boycotted the Marxist-oriented regime. Soon after the resumption of relations Saudi Arabia provided South Yemen with a reported US $ 100 million in aid. The government attempted to improve its relation with other Arab states, and the foreign minister toured most of them during the spring.

The first ambassador from Saudi Arabia arrived in Aden in April and the President of the PDRY, Salim Rubai Ali, visited Riyadh in July, but there was little evidence that the Government wished to diminish its close relationships with the countries of the communist bloc and in particular with the USSR, the German Democratic Republic and Cuba. It had been hoped that the apparent ending of the guerrilla war in the neighbouring Dhofar province of Oman would lead to better relations between Aden and Muscat but no appreciable improvement was observed.

Execution of President Ali

Mr. Salem Rubayya Ali, Head of State and Chairman of the Presidential Council of the People's Democratic Republic of Yemen (South Yemen) and deputy secretary-general of the ruling National Front, was on June 26 1978, ousted from power and executed by adversaries within the Front after several hours of fighting in the capital, Aden.

He was replaced as Head of State by Mr. Abdul Fattah Ismail, secretary-general of the National Front. According to "The Financial Times' of June 28, quoting Arab diplomatic sources, a "largescale purge' had also taken place in the armed forces, affecting "highranking officers suspected of sympathizing with the former President".

During the months following the overthrow of President Ali, there were repeated reports of continuing fighting resulting in the flight of a large number of refugees from the south to neighbouring North Yemen and Oman. North Yemeni radio on Jan. 10,1979 announced that "heavy battles" were underway throughout South Yemen caused by serious differences within the country's leadership. The struggle for power eventually resulted in the resignation on April 21,1980, of President Abdul Fattah Ismail (allegedly for health reasons) and his replacement by Prime Minister Ali Nasser Mohamed.

a) Relations with Oman

During 1981 tension between South Yemen and Oman increased following armed incidents on their common border and in the light of Omani concern over the Soviet military presence in South Yemen. On March 26 the Omani Government accused South Yemen of (i) firing at Omani aircraft and at a border patrol and of (ii) massing troops at the border.

b) Relations with Eastern Europe

A series of visits took place in late 1981 which strengthened ties between South Yemen and various East European countries.

(1) A Czechoslovak delegation headed by President Gustav Husak, arrived in Aden on Sept. 13 for an official visit. Protocols were signed for co-operation between the YSP and the Czechoslovak Communist Party (CPCZ) and between the ministries of the two countries, and also for co-operation in trade covering the period 1982-83. A 20-year Treaty of Friendship and Co-operation was also signed providing for co-operation in commerce, science, culture, education, health and media.

(2) President Mohamed paid an official visit to Hungary on Nov. 2-5 for talks with President Pal Losonczi in the course of which the two sides signed a Treaty of Friendship and Co-operation and consular/visa and economic agreements.

(3) On Nov. 5 President Mohamed flew to meet Herr Erich Honecker, First Secretary of the Socialist Unity Party of East Germany (SED) and a long-term co-operation agreement was signed between SED and YSP. South Yemeni and East German Ministers also signed an economic and technical protocol and an agreement on facilitating travel between the two countries.

(4) President Mohamed arrived in Sofia from Berlin on Nov. 9 for talks with the Bulgarian President, Mr Todor Zhickov, lasting until Nov. 11. A Treaty of Friendship and Co-operation was signed which stated inter alia that the two countries (i) "will make efforts to consolidate peace and security (and) to deepen the process of detente, (ii)" will assist the process of achieving general and full disarmament, (iii)" will assist in finding an integral solution to the Middle East crisis', and (iiii) " will strengthen and expand reciprocally advantageous economic and techno-scientific co-operation".

c) Relations with Iraq

The Iraqi news agency reported on Jan. 4, 1982 that Iraq and South Yemen had agreed to restore full diplomatic relations - the two countries having withdrawn their respective ambassadors in June 1979 over the murder in Aden of an Iraqi lecturer.

THE SYSTEM OF GOVERNMENT

The Supreme Council of the people, comprising 101 members is the supreme instrument of authority in the State. It is the legislative and constitutional machinery through which the basic principles of State policy are formulated.

Among the legislative powers of the Supreme Council are the organisation of the public sector, social and welfare securities and relations, financial and currency stability, national defence and military service obligations, general amnesty and the establishment of judicial bodies. The political authority of the Council ranges from the discussion of basic problems connected with the State's internal and external policies, to the formulation of the général policy of both the Presidential Council and the Council of Ministers.

The Council is elected for three years and election of the new council takes place sixty days before the end of tenure. Meetings are public, but may be held in camera at the request of the Presidential Council, the Council of Ministers or at the request of at least one quarter of the members of the Supreme Council.

The Presidential Council: executes all the responsibilities outlined in the Constitution in addition to the implementation of all laws and resolutions adopted by the Supreme Council during sesions. The Presidential Council is elected by the Supreme Council. It nominates the Prime Minister, the Council of Minister, the members of the National Defence Council, senior officers in the armed services and the civil administration, the Attorney General and the judges of the Supreme Court.

Article 62 of the Constitution states that there is only one supreme state authority and this is derived from the supremacy of the working people. The authority of the government is administered through elected bodies, in compliance with the objectives and functions of the Constitution. As it is, the doctrine of separation of powers is not adhered to.

POLITICAL PARTY

JUSTICE

In the territory once known as Aden colony, a supreme court and magistrate courts operate, along with traditional Moslem religious courts. In the ex-protectorate, customary law (urgi) and Moslem religious courts are normal

THE ECONOMY

Prior to indepence in 1967, the economy of the People's Democratic Republic of Yemen was largely dominated by the trade and services sector. The position of Aden on the main shipping route from Europe to the Far EAST, India and East, Africa via the Suez Canal had created favourable conditions for the development of a thriving entrepot trade and ship bunkering and servicing. In addition expenditure by the British military forces stationed at Aden and British financial assistance were important sources of foreign exchange. Industrial activity consisted mainly of petroleum refining while subsistence agriculture provided a livelihood for the bulk of the population outside Aden and the surrounding areas.

Economic conditions changed radically on the eve of independence as a result of the closure of the Suez Cnal in June 1967, the withdrawal of the British troops in the same year, and the cessation of British budgetary aid. Consequently, the People's Democratic Republic of Yemen experienced a deep and protracted recession together with severe pressure on the budget and on the balance of payments. Moreover private investments declined in the wake of the Government's comprehensive nationalization policies introduced in 1969.

The Development Plans

The PDRY has completed two development plans (1971-73) and (1974-78). Under the new plan due to be completed in 1983 GPD growth is projected at an average annual rate of 11.6% and much of this growth is expected to come from the manufacturing sector. with the public sector accounting for 60% of output.

Fishing

The fish wealth of the People's Democratic Republic of South Yemen is considered the country's most promising economic sector.

About 15,000 fishermen currently catch about 116,000 tons a year. However estimates indicate annual catches could be increased substantially without overfishing. The Gulf of Aden and its adjacent waters, by virtue of the seasonal upwellings providing nutritive plankton have abundant varieties of commercial fishes and other marine products. But expansion of the fishing sector has been hampered by the lack of adequate processing and transport facilities, experience in international marketing, built-up fisheries harbours, and of more modern fishing methods.

To correct conditions and develop coastal fishing the Government initiated in 1973 an approximately 4.2 million US Dollars project to construct shore facilities, improve the fishing fleet, improve fisheries administration and carry out studies for additional projects.

Shore facilities that have been constructed include cold storage refrigeration, freezing and ice making equipment, complemented by three insultated, five-ton trucks and communications equipment located at Mukalla and Shir, about 325 miles east of Aden. In addition five 40-foot inboard (14-metre) local fishing boats called sambuks with mechanical haulers and ice boxes have been procured for demonstration purposes and 95 inboard sambuks with ice boxes have been built to modernize and expand the fleets of the fishing cooperatives at Mukalla and Shihr.

Technical assistance under the project has been provided by the Food and Agriculture Organisation assisted by the World Bank Cooperative Programme mission for supervision of sambuk construction, demonstration of updated fishing gear, consultants for the construction of shore facilities, expert personnel to operate them and assist South Yemen in international marketing, management consultants for the Government-owned Public Corporation of Fish Wealth, and consultants to prepare a fisheries development and harbour study, an agricultural-rural development project and a water supply scheme.

Since completion in 1978, the project has increased the fish catch by as much as 5,700 tons annually, of which 3,000 tons are processed for export and the remainder sold locally

Agriculture

Only 300,000 acres of land, or half per cent of the total area of the country is under cultivation at present, although the potential area of cultivation exceeds one and a half million acres, according to expert opinion including that of FAO experts.

Acreage varies from year to year depending on the quantity of flood waters which occur usually in early spring and late summer seasons. Thus cultivation is confined to the larger wadis and deltas where fertile alluvial silt had been deposited. The remaining areas of the country are arid and largely mountainous, with sparse vegetation providing meagre pastureland.

The main crops are cotton, tobacco, vegetables, fruit and cereals (wheat, sorghum, millet and barley).

The cotton grown is of the Sudan's Lambert type and is considered the main cash crop.

Hooka-type tobacco is grown in the coastal area, although the demand for this type has been limited. But experiments in the cultivation of tobaccos likely to attract foreign demand are planned under the new economic development plan.

The PDRY is almost self-sufficiency in most kinds of vegetables and research on other varieties is continuing. But the production of fruit does not come anywhere near the market requirements of the country. Citrus fruit growing is being encouraged in mi-altitude areas. Bananas are overproduced, and export of crop surplus has so far proved difficult to arrange because existing handling and marketing facilities are inefficient and inadequate.

Food crops (sorghum, wheat, millet, barley and sesame) are well below the requirements of home consumption.

A recent report by the Ministry of Economy, Commerce and Planning designed to achieve self-sufficiency in land produce recommends the following measures:

1- expansion of acreage through the intensive exploitation of underground water resources;

2- introduction of mechanised farming methods & selected seeds;

3- reorganisation of land tenure.

Industry

Industrial activity in the PDRY prior to independence was confined to the British Petroleum Refinery at Little Aden. The only industry which had expanded rapidly in the past was the bottling of soft drinks, with an average annual output of fifty million bottles.

Today there is a small ship repairing industry capable of building small craft up to 1500 tons per year. Other industries include the production of tiles, cement blocks, aluminium ware, paper bags, furniture. Furniture making now appears to be gaining ground because of the ban on the import of wooden furniture.

Apart from handicraft and cottage industries there is one small tuna fish canning factory at Mukalla, the fifth Governorate, two cotton ginneries at Adyan and Lahej, and sesame oil extraction plants. The two modern cotton ginneries have a labour force of 350 and a total production capacity of 25,000 bales. There are also fifty automatic oil extraction plants in Lahej, employing minety workers and producing 75-100 tons of sesame oil per year.

Leather Goods

A report by Dr. Muhammad Salman Hassan a UN Planning expert recommends the setting up of a leather goods industry. Rough estimates put the number of sheep and goats in the country at four million head and the output of hides and skins at about 750,000 pieces a year which, if rationally processed, could put a ban on the import of leather and footwear.

Cement & Building Materials

Expert reports estimate there are about one hundred million tons of cement limestone in just one area forty miles from Aden Port. During the building boom in Aden in 1966 no less than 600,000 tons of cement were imported chiefly for local use. Although there has been a considerable drop in the building industry since independence, average cement requirements should now be in the region of 100,000 tons annually - enough to justify the construction of a cement plant.

Cotton Seed Oil

Annual output of cotton seeds amounts to an average of 7000 - 10000 tons. According to Dr. Jassan, this should provide sufficient raw material to feed a cotton seed oil extraction plant with a crushing capacity of 18 tons per 24 hours.

An oil extraction-soap-detergents industrial complex now provides industrial complex now provides employment to 400-500 hand and save about £ 500,000 a year which would otherwise be spent on imports.

CHADLI (Colonel Benjedid), Algerian Head of State since Feb. 9 1979. Born in 1929 in Sebaa, near Constantine in eastern Algeria. Career: Fought throughout the campaign aganist the French; in 1960 he was made commander of the 13th batallion and in June the following year became a member of the general staff of Col. Boumedienne's Army just inside the Tunisian border. As conflicts among the ranks of the guerilla forces grew within Algeria itself Mr. Chadli was sent back to take command of the east of the country where he was taken prisoner by the "Wilaya" 2 guerillas from whom he however succeeded in escaping. In 1963 he was appointed military commander of Constantine and a year later became military commander of the western area of Oran; he retained this latter position until taking charge of military and defence affairs in November 1978 when President Boumedienne became incapacitated by his illness; he had been promoted to the rank of colonel in 1969. In the meantime he had played an important part in the plot which in 1965 overthrew President Ben Bella and brought Col. Boumedienne to power, shortly after which he became a member of the Revolutionary Council. Despite being a senior member of the armed forces Col. Chadli was little known to the Algerian public. It was widely believed, however, that he was a political centrist and a moderate who was unlikely to deviate greatly from the domestic and foreign policies of his predecessor. Col. Chadli was generally regarded as having been a "compromise candidate" of the Army in an effort to end the dissent within the political leadership which had intensified coincidentally with President Boumedienne's illness and subsequent death on Dec. 27, 1978. Addr.: Presidency of the Republic, Algiers, Algeria.
